President Celman has just embarked from the Catalinas Mole, taking refuge on board of a foreign ship. The Governor of Cordova, brother of the president, has also escaped.

The revolutionary party has issued a manifesto signed by Alejandro M. Alem, A. del Valle, M. de Mama, M. Goyena, Juan Jose Romero and Lucio V. Lopez.

The revolutionists have liberated Gen. Manuel J. Campos, who was awaiting trial as a conspirator and who has now placed himself at the head of the revolutionary party.

Several Hours' Fighting.

LONDON, July 27.—A despatch from Buenos Ayres at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon says fighting was still going on at that hour and there were many killed and wounded on both sides. The insurgents have large resources at their disposal and are ably commanded. The rebels, the despatch says, have many sympathizers among the opposing troops.

By Way of Paris.

PARIS, July 26.—A despatch from Buenos Ayres says the 10th Regiment, headed by its officers, revolted this morning and the outbreak has become general. The rebels are in complete possession of their cantonments. The Government, with the assistance of the police, is trying to isolate the insurgents. The bourse and banks are closed.

THE DEAD IN HEAPS.

A London Times Cable Which Was Cut Off Abruptly.

LONDON, July 28.—A despatch to The Times from Buenos Ayres says: Early on Saturday the artillery, joined by some Cubans, took the first steps to overthrow the Government.

The troops and the police parleyed. Firing was opened at Palermo and soon extended to the Plaza Lavalle.

The infantry and artillery with mitrailleuses kept up a heavy firing all the morning. The police fired at and dispersed a crowd around the Government House but the people kept firing from houses.

A determined group of 40 men stood pluckily to their arms in front of the Government house while the roar of artillery and the roll of the musketry came nearer and nearer. A policeman in mere wantonness split an Englishman's head open with his sabre and a bystander shot the policeman down.

Then after noon the revolutionary Government issued its first decree. This ordered the mobilization of the national guard and appointed Nicolas Menalez chief of police.

At 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon two attacks were made by the Government troops on citizen battalions. The troops were repulsed both times.

Policemen and artillerymen are lying dead in heaps. The chief of police, Captain De Villa, is wounded.

The Minister of War is reported killed.

Sharp fighting continues around the artillery barracks.

[Here the cable despatch to The Times abruptly closes.]

MAY GO TO BUFFALO.

The Canadian Gas Company Cannot Get Pipe Enough.

ST. CATHARINES, July 26.—H. A. Coste, manager of the Provincial Gas Company, says that on account of the great demand for pipe on the other side it will be impossible to get the gas to this city this season. It may be piped as far as Buffalo.

Albany Printers on Strike.

ALBANY, July 26.—The differences existing between Typographical Union No. 4 of this city and the management of The Journal and The Express, respectively the evening and morning Republican organs in this city, culminated this evening when the union met, and decided by an almost unanimous vote to order the compositors of both papers to strike. The trouble has grown out of the fact that both papers, which are under practically one management, have for the past year or so borrowed stereotyped matter from each other daily frequently to the extent of several columns.

The New Cable to Anticosti.

QUEBEC, July 26.—Mr. Gisborne, Superintendent of Government telegraphs, and son, have left for the north shore of the Gulf to superintend the laying of the new cable to Anticosti, which is to be conveyed there by the steamer Newfield.

AN ONTARIO CYCLONE.

Thousands of Dollars' Worth of Property Destroyed Near Millgrove.

HAMILTON, July 26.—The prosperous little village of Millgrove and the adjoining country was visited by a cyclone which did incalculable damage to the crops yesterday afternoon. The loss to the farmers will be thousands of dollars. Trees were uprooted, and barns unroofed. The crops were levelled and completely destroyed, and hail, ranging in size from a pea to a walnut, fell to a depth of a foot in some places. The storm did not last more than 10 or 15 minutes, but it made a clean sweep of everything that came in its path.

The storm came from the south, striking Greensville earlier in the day. The damage there was not so great as at Millgrove, where the cyclone reached its fury. The path of the storm was from a half to three-quarters of a mile wide. In the vicinity of Millgrove large trees were torn from the ground and carried bodily away for some distance. Fences were blown down—a stump fence being swept away, leaving an open space for the wind to work its destruction. The crops in the swath of the storm, particularly oats, peas and turnips, were entirely destroyed. Apples, plums and all kinds of fruit were blown from the trees. Outside of the path of the storm very little damage was done, the rain being light and the wind very mild. Great damage was done on John I. [illegible]'s farm, just outside of Millgrove, which is rented by William Gillmore. Here the loss was very heavy. Gillmore had ten acres of spring wheat, which was leveled to the ground and will not yield more than 25 bushels. One large beech tree on his farm was uprooted and carried into J. Eaton's farm. Nelson Ryckman's barn was carried away about 100 yards into Hiram Anderson's farm.

As Large as Plums.

ROSEMONT, July 26.—A severe thunderstorm passed over this village about 2 o'clock yesterday. It was accompanied by a hailstorm, and for a radius of about two miles grain, fruit trees and vegetables were badly destroyed. The windows on the west side of the buildings were completely destroyed. The hailstones were as large as plums.

A Destructive Ontario Hail Storm.

EMBRO, July 26.—One of the worst hail storms ever known here visited this section last evening, doing a tremendous amount of damage to crops, great fields of oats being literally stripped and other grains suffering in like manner. The storm lasted only a few minutes, but so terrible was the downfall of hail that it could [illegible]

Eight-Year-Old Maud White Accidentally Killed at Barnesdale.

ST. CATHARINES, July 26.—A boy named Eddie Taylor, 6 years old, visiting at his grandfather's near Barnesdale below St. Catharines, was playing with the 8-year-old daughter of W. J. White, an employe in the axe factory, and became possessed of a loaded gun, which in some manner went off, the charge taking effect in the girl's neck, causing her death almost immediately. The little fellow became so frightened at the result of his play that he ran away. After two hours' diligent hunt he was found by the neighbors hiding in the top of an apple tree. It appears several children were on a patch picking berries and playing about when little Eddie got an old gun. He was pulling at the trigger and cried out:

"Maudie White, take care or you'll get hurt."

Just then the gun discharged, blowing little Maudie's head almost off. Little Eddie is too young to realize what he had done. His parents live in Detroit, Mich.

MAKING THINGS LIVELY.

American Cattlemen Attempt to Take Possession of a Ship.

NEW YORK, July 27.—American cattlemen returning from Europe are making things lively for the captains of the ships by which they take passage. For the second time in as many weeks an English steamer came into port to-day with her Union Jack down. The police boat responded and found the steamer to be the Chicago, which left London July 10. Capt. Morgan made a formal charge against three of the 27 cattlemen who were passengers by the Chicago and turned them over to the police. They were John McNamara, James Tynan and Henry Halleson of this city.

These men, aided by the others, Captain Morgan says, intimidated his crew, insulted him and stole a portion of the ship's cargo. The crew of the steamer numbered only 12. The cattlemen began on the second day out to break down the cattle pens on deck, and when remonstrated with threatened to "take possession" of the ship. They got into the hold on July 18, made a raid on the ale stored there and became drunk. They then fought among themselves and insisted on occupying the forecastle instead of their own quarters in the stern of the ship. Two of the men took up their quarters in the captain's cabin. They were finally driven out, but for the remainder of the trip they made themselves very offensive.

A Blackmailer Murdered.

FRESNO, Cala., July 27.—John D. Fiske, a lawyer and opera house manager, was shot and killed last night by Joseph T. Stillman, an inventor. Stillman had been hunting for Fiske all day and found him at last in front of the Grand Union Hotel. Stillman claims the shooting grew out of an attempt of Fiske to blackmail him. He says Fiske has been demanding half interest in certain patents of his and threatening that unless Stillman gave him such interest he would tell Mrs. Stillman of an alleged intimacy with another woman. Stillman declares he was driven to desperation by Fiske's threats.

Killed by a Lunatic.

LOCKPORT, July 27.—At Wolcottville, a German village ten miles southeast of this city, yesterday afternoon, a lunatic named Yago beat Poormaster Schultz so severely with a shovel and an axe that Schultz died in the evening. Yago had been in an asylum two or three years, but was recently permitted to return home apparently restored to reason. He soon, however, became so violent that Poormaster Schultz, accompanied by a constable, went to Yago's house to take him and return him to the asylum. He attacked Schultz with a shovel and an axe, and soon beat him into insensibility. He then fled and has not been captured.

The Sectional Boycott.

ST. LOUIS, July 27.—Gov. Ross of Texas said here yesterday that the proposed boycott of the North by the South was utterly impracticable, and if practicable it would be unwise, because it would array the North and the South against each other in permanent political, social and commercial hostility. It would withdraw millions of eastern capital from the South and destroy the credit of thousands of southern merchants.

The Daily Smash.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M., July 27.—Yesterday there was a head end collision on the Santa Fe Road at Canon City between a passenger and freight train. Engineer Dennis of the freight was killed, Fireman Westfall and Messenger Hanna badly injured.

LAWRENCE, Mass. July 26.—A cyclone, the first of any considerable importance within memory in New England, and one equal in destructive power to those so frequently reported from western communities, visited the suburb of South Lawrence this forenoon at about 9½ o'clock, and in 15 minutes had killed 8 persons, seriously injured from 15 to 20, slightly injured at least 20 more, cut a swath through a thickly populated section 300 feet wide and a mile long, rendered 150 people homeless, destroyed or greatly damaged from 75 to 100 buildings, mostly dwelling houses, levelled a beautiful grove of over 500 trees and entailed a property loss now estimated at $100,000, all of which was insured against damage by wind and storm. The calamity is the greatest which has visited Lawrence since the fall and burning of the Pemberton Mills 30 years ago.

South Lawrence is that section of the city lying south of the Merrimac River. At this point the main line of the Boston & Maine Railroad takes a sharp turn to the eastward and following the Merrimac crosses the river at Bradford. A railroad bridge connects the suburb with the city proper and with the railroad lines north. The point is a busy railroad junction, and in the vicinity were many wooden houses, occupied mainly by well-to-do mechanics, and among these the air fiend spent his greatest fury. The northern boundary of the belt of destruction was but three streets south of the lofty mills with their busy throngs of thousands of workers, showing how narrow was the escape from more appalling loss of life and property.

It was a veritable dog day. The air was hot and humid, [illegible] scurried [illegible] seemed to drop from the cumulous mass hanging to the southwest and move rapidly with awful aspect toward the city. It was accompanied by torrents of rain.

In an instant the crash came. Buildings were crushed like eggshells; some were lifted from their foundations and dashed to pieces; others were tipped over or blown from their position and more or less damaged. The air was filled with flying débris. Most of those who met death in the wreck were killed instantly. Many lay unconscious or groaning in the ruins of their homes.

As soon as the survivors realized the extent of the devastating work word was sent to the police station, and ambulances with a squad of officers started for the scene. Marshal Vosseson ordered out the whole force, an alarm was rung in and the firemen responded promptly and rendered great assistance in removing the injured from the ruins. The ambulance carried several loads of mangled and crushed human beings to the hospital. Others were taken to private houses.

The work of devastation began at the cricket grounds, on the southwest, with the uprooting of a number of magnificent trees. In Emmett-street the wind lifted a story and a half house, belonging to Thomas Evans, bodily and slapped it into the roadway a complete wreck. Mr. Evans, his wife and baby were in the house at the time but escaped without great injury. No. 19 Emmett-street, occupied by a family named Daley, was lifted from its foundation and dashed down. No. 6 was partly moved from the foundation. In the rear of No. 6 was a story and a half house occupied by James Lyons and family. Hearing the approach of the storm, Lyons rushed into the house, seized his baby from his wife's arms, and fled into the street. Both man and child escaped, but the dead body of Mrs. Lyons was subsequently taken from the ruins of her dwelling. On Saunders court near by, St. Patrick's Church hall, a wooden structure, was carried 15 feet from its foundation and a few windows were broken in the parochial residence. At the foot of Saunders court a switch house, in which Michael Higgins, section hand, was standing, was taken up bodily by the wind and carried under the overhead railroad bridge crossing Salem-street, where Higgins fell out and was instantly killed. The railing on this bridge was taken off as though cut with a knife. The granite sheds of W. F. Jones near the bridge were demolished. The house of William F. Cutler, foreman of the Boston & Maine car shops, was next demolished.

F. S. Carr, chief clerk of the car shops, was an eye-witness of the storm at this point. He says there was a sudden rumbling sound and darkness. Timbers and trees flew by the car shops at a terrible rate. When these had passed he and other occupants of the shops saw that the Cutler House was in ruins. Miss Flossie Cutler was found in the cellar with a sprained ankle. Mrs. Cutler was found in the ruins slightly hurt. Little Helen Cutler was crossing the Salem-street bridge at the time, within a stone's throw of her home, and was buried beneath a pile of lumber and ruins. She was found by men from the car shops on their way to the ruins and dug out, but has since died from concussion of the brain. The cyclone now entered Springfield-street, where the greatest devastation was wrought.

Eight persons already are known to have been killed and between 20 and 30 injured, some fatally. The names of the dead are given above. The injured are: Mrs. W. F. Cutler and two daughters, injured about the head and back; Jessie Dorley, Frank Ceese and wife, slightly; Mrs. Manders, three-year-old daughter, fatally; Hugh Merriman, fracture of collar bone; five children, some of them badly; Mrs. Ryan, severe scalp wound; Patrick Nugent, Minnie Reed, Richard McDermott, Lizzie Oldworth, Annie Dillon, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Merriman, Orr Morgan, aged seven, Jennie and Annie McLaughlin, Andrew Hart, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Thibault, Ellen McLaughlin, Cornelius Reardon, elbow fractured; Marie Quinn, aged 12, internal injuries; Bridget McDermott, scalp wound; Mrs. William Cutler, Miss Harriet Cutler, Miss Lizzie Morrissey, spine injured.

A Louisiana Tragedy.

NEW ORLEANS, July 27.—At Milneburg this evening a row occurred between a number of men from this city. Jack Hayes and Tom Larnegan were mortally wounded. John Larnegan, sr., was shot in the thigh. Cause of trouble unknown.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., July 27.—Two weeks ago Colonel Tyler of this city was appointed receiver for the Sells & Andress circus and menagerie. Last night somebody, thought to be Andress, stole the elephant, two camels and five horses.

AN IMPORTANT RAILWAY PROJECT.

The proposed railway from lake Ontario through Peterborough to Sault Ste. Marie, to build which notice of application for incorporation has been given by Messrs. Hall & Hayes, would be an important line for the country and of considerable benefit to Peterborough.

As the preliminary steps have only been begun, the line has, of course, not been definitely laid out, but the country through which it would run is almost entirely without railway accommodation and needs the aid a railway would give. It will commence at lake Ontario at some point in Northumberland or Hastings. Should the point chosen be near Brighton, the line from there to Peterborough would pass through townships in Northumberland that are not well provided with railway accommodation, and after passing this town the route would follow a course in which a railway is greatly needed. Bobcaygeon has to depend on water communication in the summer season [illegible] would be a boon to that village and [illegible] as well as to the country on this side of and beyond the village. Beyond Bobcaygeon the line would open a new avenue of trade for Galway and the townships further north. Apart from the general benefit and importance of the proposed line, it would be of great benefit to that section of country and would be of great advantage to Peterborough, as it would make this town, as a business centre, accessible to the trade of those northern townships. At present the people to the north of us have no railway connection with Peterborough, while on one side a railway takes their trade to Lindsay and on the other side the Central Ontario leads it down to the front towns of Hastings county. This proposed railway would remedy this to a great extent and would strike through portions of country not now served by a railway.

As the line proceeded it would penetrate a large section of country, in the districts of Parry Sound Nipissing, and Muskoka, that has no railway communication and would open this immense tract to settlement. It would be a colonization line of importance and is one, therefore, deserving the encouragement and aid of the Province.

It will thus be seen that this railway is one that is needed and one that would be of great benefit. But we have as yet pointed out what would no doubt be the least of its advantages. The Sault is already a great outlet for western trade, and more United States railways are heading for that point. There is now only one line from it to the east, and as a through line the proposed railway becomes of national importance. The Sault, with all its present and prospective importance, is only 365 miles distant from Peterborough—a much shorter distance than any existing line—and this railway would secure a large share of the carrying trade that must find its way out in some direction, and would naturally flow into this channel.

The projected railway is in good hands. On account of the benefit the line would be to Peterborough the hands of the promoters should be upheld by the people here. As it would open a large section of the Province, now without railway communication, the Provincial Government should give it assistance, and as the road would be a national one in its main object it should receive aid from the Dominion. The clear necessity for the railway, the great benefit it would be to varied interests and the ability and energy of its promoters all combine to found the hope that it will be carried forward to completion.

Drowned.

CAMPBELLFORD, July 27.—Yesterday afternoon a boy named Dennis Tobin, aged 9 years, was on a boom in the river. His mother standing on shore saw him and called him to come away and in trying to do so his foot caught a pin in the boom, he lost his balance, fell in and was drowned in full view of his mother, who rushed out to go in after him but was held back by neighbors. The body has not been recovered.

CORNWALL, July 26.—An Italian named Don Niccoli, employed by W. Davis & Sons, fell into the canal as he was crossing the waste weir, near lock 18, on his way to work. He did not rise to the surface. Several fellow laborers were crossing at the time. This is the same spot where the Englishman Stanley lost his life last fall.

They Looked Only One Way.

GRAFTON, W. Va., July 27.—William Golden, his wife and three children started to cross the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio road near the Railroad hotel, but seeing a yard engine coming up the road they stopped to let it pass. Mr. Golden was holding his 9-year-old boy in his arms and his wife a month's old baby. While watching the engine a passenger train came along and struck the family, instantly killing the husband, wife and two children and fatally injuring the boy who was in his father's arms. The little fellow died in an hour.

The U. S. Tariff Debate.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Tariff will be the principal theme of discussion in the Senate this week. So far all the Democratic members of the Committee on Finance except Mr. Carlisle have delivered speeches against the pending bill and he is expected to address the Senate Monday. It is impossible to say how long the general debate will last, as almost every Democratic Senator is understood to have a formal speech prepared for delivery.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

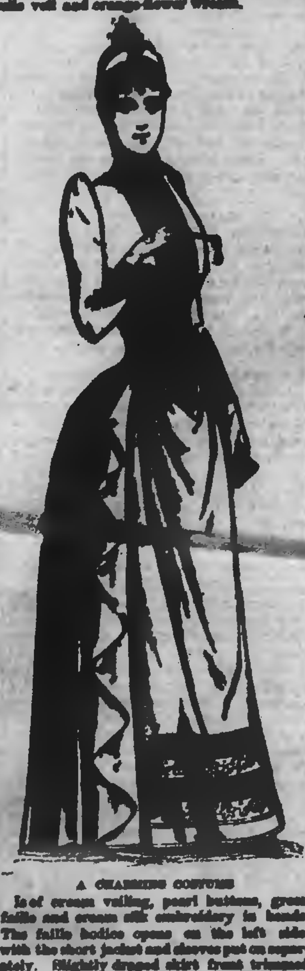
GRACEFUL GOWNS AND CHARMING COSTUMES DESCRIBED.

The Latest Styles From London, Paris and New York—Specially Gathered and Arranged—Dainty Dresses of Every Description—Some Original Illustrations.

The genuine wash silks make neat afternoon dresses, with a yoke and cuffs of heavy open guipure lace, and touches here and there of velvet ribbon. Lawns, organdies, and French batistes are made up over silk, which matches the color of the flower prominent in the lawn, and trimmed with Mechlin or Valenciennes lace.

An original dress is a dark but bright blue muslin, printed all over with natural-sized marguerites, and made up over a yellow silk foundation, which asserts itself. The bodice and skirt are all in one; the bodice fastens, as many of the new bodices do now, at the back. Round the skirt is a flounce of the muslin, edged with black lace. There are an infinity of runners at the waist, and long pendants of black velvet ribbon hang from the shoulders of the high sleeves, fastened with ordinary mother-of-pearl buttons at the wrist. The bows stand up well on the shoulders, and there are loops of cord at the waist.

A new wedding-dress is made of peau-de cygne, which is a make of white silk softer and more pliable than peau de soie. The skirt, which has a long train, is made with three flat panels, not fastened down, which fall over an underskirt, and between each panel is a row en echelle of five bouquets of orange blossoms, mixed with white ribbon; bodice with plastron made of gauze arranged in pleats, but not fastened down; tulle veil and orange-flower wreath.



A CHARMING COSTUME

Is of cream veiling, pearl buttons, green faille and cream silk embroidery in bands. The faille bodice opens on the left side, with the short jacket and sleeves put on separately. Slightly draped skirt front trimmed with the silk and embroidery. Pleated back, with jabots on sides caught with buttons. Toque of green velvet, cream crepe and white flowers. Light tan-colored gloves.

Dainty gowns of gray cashmere or crepon are combined with Bengaline or faille, and steel or gold gimp, the silk answering for the yoke, back and front, collar, and full sleeves, with an edging of narrow gimp on the collar, yoke, and cuffs. The dartless bodice and round skirt are of the woolen material. A reception dress of black silk brocaded with green leaves is cut in princesse style, with immense sleeves of green silk, and belt, collar, and cuffs of fine jet passementerie; from the belt depend long strands of beads covering the front of the skirt.

The tea-gowns are all of the soft draping designs, until now associated with women of the East. One gown, in the deep, old-fashioned pink, a mixture of cashmere and crepe de Chine, has the back and front of the bodice entirely composed of white muslin guipure; wing-like ends of cashmere fall from the shoulders at the back to the hem, the fine crepe de Chine falling softly in front of the skirt. The sleeves—large and ample—are made after the order of the choir-boys' sleeves, only more closely pleated on the shoulders.

A lovely tea-gown in maize silk has the back widths opened to admit of an insertion of the most delicate shade of lilac silk, and has the front of fine black lace over lilac, with a ruche of ostrich feathers, in maize and lilac, going up and down, and round the high collar. The long, tight sleeves of lilac are partly covered with black lace, which is arranged over the top of the arm, gathered up, and then allowed to fall in long, graceful folds on each side of the train. To a tall, slender figure, nothing could be more becoming, and the combination of shades is exquisite.

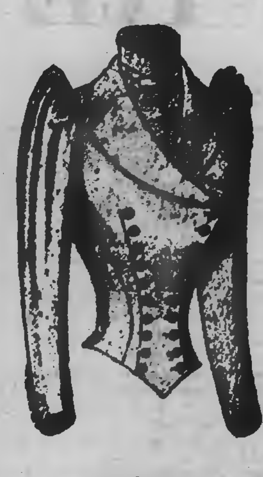
Long, round apron fronts are being slowly revived, the skirt beneath, contrasting or matching in material. We are told that skirts will soon have two gores on each side. Silk skirts are now made up in this style by exclusive modistes, with a cording up each seam and at the foot. The long drapery leaves the sides entirely exposed, and is cut in deep points on the lower edge.

For fete gowns some fancy woolen brocades will be arranged with silk. One pretty model is a woolen brocade in old-pink and serpent-green shades, very simply draped, with full, gigot sleeves of soft-toned green silk; silk in deep points brought down the bodice from each armhole, and flanking the folds of the brocade, points of silk trimming the edge of the skirt in front. The points are all curved on one side in a peculiar way.

Odd waists of black surah are trimmed with a black lace ruffle, starting from the belt and continuing around the shoulders. When something brighter is wished, gold gimp is added to the collar and waistbands. Black lace waists, for wearing with silk or lace skirts, are full on the shoulders, shirred or fitted with pleats at the waist-line, striped and trimmed with satin ribbon. India silk and tartan silk waists are prettily trimmed with velvet ribbon, and transform a plain dress into quite a jaunty affair.

Jacket-fronts are prominent, whether cut round or square. Full fronts to bodices are universal. Yoke effects are liked. Blouses of every color and style are fashionable and comfortable, and seldom it is that fashion and comfort go hand-in-hand. Welting cords on basque edges are occasionally seen. Coat-tail backs and bluntly pointed fronts abound.

Shirts or waistcoats are of striped or figured pique or percale, have shirt-sleeves finished with a buttoned cuff, high collar, and pleated bosom. They are worn with a four-in-hand tie and a cutaway jacket. Pinked ruffles are worn on underskirts, when the drapery is lifted high on one side, as often occurs.



LADIES' BASQUE.

The V and high collar of this model may be omitted and one of linen, figured percale, etc., worn instead. Wool goods are used to advantage in this pattern, which has a coat-tail back fitted with the side forms to the shoulder, double-breasted front, rolled collar, and revers. The sleeves are full and high at the top, close at the wrists, and trimmed with buttons up the outside seam.

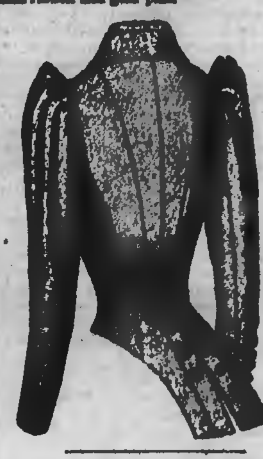
Traveling blouses of dark plaid surah have a rolled collar, shirt sleeves, yoke back, and full front confined by shirring-strings run in a casing at the waist-line. An outside breast pocket holds a dainty handkerchief. Spanish jackets of velvet, cloth, and jet are worn over black silk or net house dresses.

In France they are wearing guimpes and undersleeves of nainsook with silk and cotton dresses. Thin gowns are made with a shirred round, or pointed yoke. Many of the basques and waists seem to be worn over the yoke; but, in reality, they are both over one lining, which is still fitted with the usual seams and darts, although the outside fabrics take many fantastic forms.

Plain and bordered canvas dresses are again prepared for the seaside. Polonaise dresses are simply princesse gowns, having the lapped Russian front, under a pointed belt of velvet like the high collar and cuffs. The lining skirt is of taffeta silk finished with two pinked frills, and shows as the front blows open. The back may be in one piece, or cut off at the waist-line, and a full width gathered on. Such suits may be recommended for early fall traveling, as the style is hardly here yet.

A STYLISH WALKING DRESS.

One or two woolen materials and velvets are stylishly combined in this costume. The lining skirt is shaped as usual and deeply faced in front and on the left side with the plaid, which also forms a border; both are cut on the bias, on the round, gathered skirt, which is lifted by a long buckle on the left side. The round waist opens invisibly and is full from the shoulders, with [illegible] over the top, and a full Empire belt of velvet [illegible] a curved buckle. The gauntlet sleeves have a full puff of woolen material, with the lower part of velvet in many wrinkles over the arm, close fitting at the wrists, and trimmed with buttons on the inside seam. Collar of velvet. Hat of straw, decorated with plaid ribbon and gold pins.



A Study of the Decollete.

Women who wear decollette gowns comprise three classes, but one of which is justified and wears it with propriety. The woman "to the manner born," educated to it, taught the propriety of such exposure along with her catechism, wears this dress as a soldier does his uniform—as a matter of form of duty, of necessity and of habit. Such women wear this exposeful garment with no more notion of indelicacy than is entertained by the dusky belle of the Sandwich Islands when she makes her debut in a string of beads, a cotton apron and clinking anklets.

The second class, not so well warranted in following the fashion, are the women not educated to it, ladies whose early life and training were not in decollete circles, but who instead have imbibed much of the stern puritanism, or prudishness, or provincialism, if you will, or orthodox teaching, of modest example and rural simplicity.

The woman whose sudden rise of position tempts her into an unaccustomed baring of neck and arms against her conscience commits an impropriety.

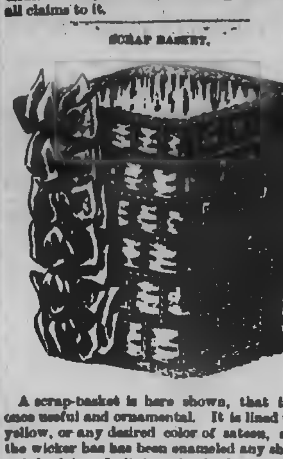
The third class are the vain women, the silly and coquettish women, the women who have perfect figures and malformed intellects. These are the women who have in the eagerness for admiration disgraced the social regalia and made it a reproach.

The important thing is not how the body but how the mind is clothed. When a high-cut mind goes out in company with a low-cut dress the world does not concern itself with the robe. But a decollete spirit will permeate an assembly, though its neck band tickles its ears and its wrist frills mask the hand.

The Stranded Idaho.

QUEBEC, July 27.—The steamship Idaho will become a total wreck, but the greater part of her cargo may be saved. All work in connection with the salvage of the stranded vessel's cargo is now in the hands of the underwriters, the owners having abandoned all claims to it.

SCRAP BASKET.



A scrap-basket is here shown, that is at once useful and ornamental. It is lined with yellow, or any desired color of sateen, after the wicker has has been enameled any shade, or left plain. In lining the basket, slightly full the sides, and make the bottom piece plain. Then turned No. 9 or 12 satin ribbon in and out of the wicker-work, as shown, and tie a bow where each row ends, forming sufficient trimming for the convenient article.

And Why?

Because Paper is'nt handy, the Ink has given out, Pens are no good—and its not a fair day for writing.

There's little excuse for the paper not at hand when one pound of Fine Cream Linen Note Paper, ruled and unruled can be had for 25 cents at the REVIEW Stationery Store. Every brand of tea has its own peculiarities. So to get a perfect Tea, you can only do so by blending these different kinds in proportion, that by so doing the one flavor benefits the other. This being the case, how is it possible to obtain such perfection? Only by a long practical experience and having at your disposal large quantities of the several Brands to operate with. Such are the conditions by which the Tea is introduced for the first time to the Canadian public under the name and brand of Koh-i-nur. This Tea has been carefully blended by those who have been engaged, and have had a life's experience, in the trade. For sale at Hawley Bros.' tea store. d18w30

THE COLTS AND BANKERS.

A Scratch Cricket Match—The Colts Victorious.

A scratch cricket match was played on the P.A.A.A. grounds on Saturday afternoon between the Colts, the name of old time fame, and an eleven selected from among the bankers, attaches of the town. The result of the game was a victory for the Colts in the first innings.

The bankers went to bat first and were retired for 42 runs. The Colts followed and made 57, E. Boucher making the score, 12 runs, with V. McGill second with 11 to his credit. The bankers in the second innings ran up an even hundred with the loss of only five wickets, and as it was then nearly six o'clock and the stumps were to be drawn at 6.30, the bankers laid down their bats and allowed their opponents to go to bat, expecting to have the last wicket down before time was called. In this they were disappointed, as only six of the Colts had been retired when time was called. The game therefore went to the Colts by the first innings.

The score was:—

The Drinking Fountains.

The Capt. Brown Memorial fountain at the Central Park is being prepared so that it can be used. A cesspool is being dug for the overflow and Mr. Noble has the contract for putting in the pipe to carry away the water. This is a work that, though it might have been done before, will be appreciated. The water was turned on the new fountain at the police station on Saturday evening and it is freely used. Between the hours of twelve and one to-day twenty-six horses were watered at it, and the bell shaped cup has been carried to many mouths.

Stony Lake Notes.

One of the guests of Eel's creek camp, Mr. J. B. Clifford, of Montreal, passed through town to-day. He reports the fishing as excellent, Dr. Mark having caught eight fine "lunge" on Wednesday and on Friday Mr. H. B. Anderson succeeded in landing a finny beauty weighing 19 lbs. 8 oz. Bon fires have been an attraction at the head of the lake for the past few evenings. The party includes Mrs. A. A. McIntyre and Miss Lousley, of Peterborough, Miss Mark, of Keene, the Misses Anderson, of Apsley, Messrs. Brillinger and Clifford, of Montreal, Dr. Mark and Messrs. H. B., D. and T. A. Anderson, of Apsley.

Another Family of Bears.

On Saturday evening a second company of foreigners struck town with performing bears and pitched tent just across the boundary on Barnardo-ave. There was a man, several boys and two or three women in the company, one horse and a mule. As soon as they had things settled two of the women started out to beg and came back with eatables. The police, however, were notified of their arrival and yesterday morning Chief Roszel and Constable Adams called upon them and invited them to leave town at once. They accepted the pressing invitation and started out on the road to Warsaw, the constables escorting them to the finger post. It was a curious spectacle they presented as the procession moved along. The man lead a black bear at the head, followed by boys leading the others. The horse had a bundle slung across his back and a child nestled in it on one side. The mule, led by a woman, drew a light caravan. The women were scantily clad, in bare feet, with a cloth over their heads.

A CHARGE OF FALSE PRETENCES.

A Case in the Police Court involving over Eighty Dollars.

At the Police Court this morning E. J. Hartley was charged by Thos. Dunn with having obtained him from various sums of money, aggregating over $80, under false pretences. Mr. A. P. Poussette, Q. C., appeared for the prosecutor and Mr. E. B. Edwards appeared for Mr. Hartley. When the case was called Mr. Edwards objected to the form of the information, and being sustained by the Magistrate it was amended so as to charge Mr. Hartley with having on a day in April obtained $84.25 from Mr. Dunn under false pretences. Mr. Poussette, however, on behalf of Mr. Dunn, objected to Mr. Dumble sitting on the case, as he had acted as solicitor in a case in the Division Court with which his charge was intimately connected and, while not wishing to say anything disrespectful of the court, he believed there would naturally be a bias. Mr. Dumble said that he could hear the case impartially. He would not try it, but if evidence was brought forward to make out a prima facie case he would commit.

Mr. Dunn was the only witness called and he said that he had rented a store from Mr. Hartley, and Mr. Hartley had told him he had authority to collect the rent. He paid Mr. Hartley various amounts ranging from 25 or 50 cents up to $2, and took an I. O.U. for each payment. In April he counted up the I.O.Us. and gave them to Mr. Hartley, taking instead a receipt from him for the amount as part payment of rent. (The receipt was produced.) He heard Mr. Hartley swear in the Division Court on Friday, in the case of Dunn vs. Mrs. Hartley, that he had no right to collect the rent. In cross-examination Mr. Dunn said that these sums had all been paid in cash. He did not know whether any of the money had been spent at his bar. When the receipt was being written out he might have asked Mr. Hartley to put in the words "part payment of rent," but did not remember doing so.

Mr. Edwards submitted that at the time the receipt was given no money had been paid and no false pretense made, on this and other grounds he argued that the case should be dismissed.

Mr. Poussette argued that a good prima facie case had been made out.

The Magistrate said that false pretences was obtaining money on the strength of a false statement. It must be a statement that the party advancing the money believed and must be advanced on the strength of that statement. There was no clear evidence that these moneys were paid on the strength of such a statement. Besides there was no proof that he had no right to collect the rent.

Mr. Poussette called attention to Mr. Hartley's admission at the Division Court.

The Magistrate said that was no proof. After further argument on the point the Magistrate reserved judgment until to-morrow morning.

A Terrible Accident.

This morning an accident of a terrible and most pathetic character occurred near the Roman Catholic cemetery, south of the town. Mr. Geo. May was drawing sand from a pit and had to pass out through a gate. His little girl, about two years of age, was standing at one of the gate posts as he was coming out with a load, but as he was walking on the opposite side of the waggon, driving the horses, he did not see the child. He heard the little tot give a startled "whoa," and he stopped the horses as quickly as he could and rushed around. It was a terrible sight that met the father's eyes when he reached the other side of the waggon, for the child was lying on the ground apparently lifeless. The wheel of the waggon had struck the poor child and knocked her down, and passed over her leg, body and head and crushed her terrible. Blood oozed from her mouth as she was borne home, which was not far from where the accident happened, and when she was tenderly laid down in the house there was life still in the little body, but it was nearly crushed out. She gasped for breath occasionally, which was the only sign that the tender spirit had not fled. After lingering for an hour and a half the little sufferer died. The funeral will take place at 4.30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Obituary.

A correspondent sends the REVIEW the following interesting notes regarding the life of Mr. Malcolm Campbell, who died at Keene in June last:—Malcolm Campbell was born on Jan. 6th, 1806, at Kenmore, Lochfine, Parish of Inverary. In the year 1830 he sailed from Greenock on the day on which King George IV died, and settled in Otonabee, made his home at Peter McFarlane's (his brother-in-law) for one year and worked at his trade as carpenter. His mother and two brothers came out the following year (1831). He visited Scotland in the spring of 1837, and landed in Liverpool the day King William IV died. He left Scotland in 1838, became acquainted on shipboard with Miss Janet Irvine and was married to her in New York and there remained working at his trade till about August of same year (1838), when he returned to Otonabee and settled on a farm near Keene. He had issue eight children, four boys and four girls. Two of the sons are in Dakota and two of the daughters are living in Otonabee, the one married to Mr. Duncan McIntyre and the other at home, unmarried. His wife died in 1884, aged 72 years. His father was a weaver. He had two brothers, James and Duncan. Both were married and left families. Rev. Arch. Colquhoun was the first Presbyterian minister at Keene—next Mr. Wilson, then Mr. Wallace and next Mr. Andrews, the present incumbent. When Mr. Campbell arrived at Keene, Dr. John Gilchrist was there, practising his profession and running a saw mill, grist mill, distillery and general store.

A PROPOSED RAILWAY.

From Lake Ontario, Through Peterborough, to Sault Ste. Marie.

For some time there has been railway talk in the air, and it was felt here that a new line or lines giving Peterborough connection with the north was needed and should be pushed. One project that received attention was the building of a line to Bobcaygeon, to which the REVIEW has before called attention, and further on to the north.

This consideration of railway interests has not been allowed to drop without action being taken, and notice has been given in the Canada Gazette that application will be made to Parliament to incorporate a company to build a line from some point on Lake Ontario, through Peterborough and Bobcaygeon, to Sault Ste. Marie. The following in regard to it appears in the Ottawa correspondence of the Empire:—

"Messrs. Hall & Hayes, of Peterborough, give notice of attention to ask for an Act incorporating a company to build a railway from some point on Lake Ontario, in the county of Northumberland or the County of Hastings, thence to Peterborough, thence to Bobcaygeon, thence to some point on the Northern Pacific Junction railway between Port Carling and Bark's Falls, thence to French River, thence through the districts of Nipissing and Algoma to Sault Ste. Marie."

Brevities.

—The cells were untenanted last night.

—A large number went north to Stony Lake this morning.

—The gang with the performing bears who were here about a week ago struck Port Hope on Saturday.

Three hundred feet of Eureka hose arrived to-day from Toronto for the fire department.

—Willie Quinn, son of Mr. John Quinn, of Fenelon Falls, fell off a delivery waggon and injured his head severely.

—A monster has frequently been seen in Cameron Lake. Mr. W. E. Ellis, of Fenelon Falls, got a good view of it and says it is five feet long and of great bulk.

That Hacking Cough can be so quickly cured by Shiloh's Cure. We guarantee it. Sold by Geo. A. Schofield, druggist, Peterborough.

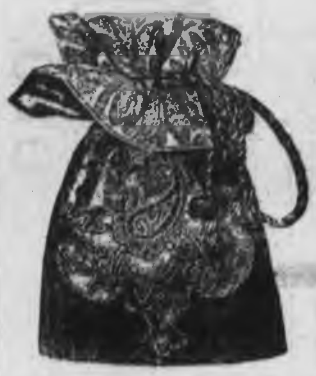
Fashion Novelties.

Another specialty is chocolate-colored Russia leather for the Oxford and brogue shoes, which has superseded the dark red of last season. Later on, tennis shoes will be made of it. The heels and laces match perfectly, and the brogues are remarkably smart.

Jet coronets, long discarded, are quite to the fore again, and may be seen run through fluffy hair, or on bonnets among masses of flowers. Anything fanciful in the way of coronets, large combs (but not high ones) or expansive pin-heads, now appear in fully-dressed heads, or smart bonnets.

Fans for balls are made of painted gauze, or else of straight feathers the color of the dress, and each feather is painted with small flowers to match, such as forget-me-nots with blue, violets with lilac, etc. The handsome fans of curled feathers and [illegible] shoes mounted in leather, taking its name from the brand of cigars, Larranaga, the color of which it follows exactly. There are dainty bijou evening shoes of it, with a small metallic ornament; house shoes, with high instep, flap, and bronze and steel buckle, and Oxford walking shoes of a thicker skin.

A DAINTY BAG.



This Pompadour bag is intended for any use for which a pretty bag is appropriate. The blue plush outside has an applique design of old-rose satin, embroidered with gold, pale green, cream, blue, tan, and heliotrope silks, with a velvet palm introduced.

KEENE CHRONICLES.

Correspondence of the Review.

TOWNSHIP COUNCIL.—A meeting of Otonabee Council was held on July 21st. Wm. Redpath was allowed four days statute labor for two sons entered on roll as farmers' sons. The west half of lot 31, con. 3, assessed to Michael Garvey, tenant, was ordered to be struck of the roll, as it is assessed to Michael and Patrick O'Leary, owners of said lot. The Council adopted the resolution passed by the County Council at its last session to have a vote taken at the next election on the question whether it is advisable to abolish statute labor and have a payment in money in lieu thereof. With regard to the application of Alex. Drummond for compensation for road running through his land the Council refused to grant compensation. The following accounts were ordered to be paid:—T. Laing, for crossing opposite his shop, $3.40; M. Kennally, overseeing road work, $6.00; S. Stewart gravel, $4.05, poll room $3.50; P. Conroy, cedar, $2.50, gravel $3.25; D. Hayes, cedar, $3.21; D. REVIEWS.

THE METHODIST MAGAZINE, (Toronto: William Briggs.)—The August number of this Magazine maintains its popular interest even during the heated term. The fine illustrations of Venice—the romantic Mecca of so many tourists—will give the opening article a special interest. "Through Yorkshire," with its numerous pictures of the North Country, will carry many Canadian readers back to their old home. Lady Brassey's Adventures at the Antipodes have a pathetic interest as the narrative approaches the end of her life. In view of the proposal of Dr. Douglas to establish an Order of Deaconesses in Canada, the article on the Deaconess Movement in English and American Methodism is of special importance. Miss Daniels' graceful sketch of "A Forgotten Queen" shows what gilded misery often dwells in a palace. The tragic story of "Jack the Fisherman" is one of the strongest temperance sketches ever written. Other articles make up an excellent number.

Try "Montserrat" Lime-Fruit Juice if you would taste a most delicious and wholesome cooling draught.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

All About Summer Dinners—Recipes for Dainty Dishes.

The dinner in summer should be a much lighter, more dainty meal than in winter. Let the cloth be pure white damask, with little color displayed in the decorations, except in that furnished by the flowers. Little Neck clams are, of course, particularly nice to introduce the soup, which should be a clear consomme or a delicate cream soup. The heavy English soups, like calf's head and oxtail, belong to the winter table. Mulligatawny is an Indian soup, which belongs to summer, and is properly served with a chicken or game dinner. Most varieties of fish are only in season in summer. The greater part of the fish sold in the winter is refrigerated, and cannot be compared in flavor with perfectly fresh fish, for no refrigerated food loses so much by being frozen as fish. Heavy, hot roasts of beef or mutton may often be discarded on a warm summer's day for broiled lamb-chops served with maitre d'hotel butter; or for fried chicken or broiled cutlets; or for a delicately crisp roast of spring lamb with mint sauce.

Curries belong to summer, and they offer an agreeable change to the appetite, which has become jaded by a monotonous winter diet. A bottle of curry-powder should be purchased at the beginning of each summer season to insure it's being fresh; as it costs but 25 cents a bottle it is no great extravagance to throw out what has been left over from the previous year, and is probably stale. Chicken and veal are the most suitable meats for a curry, but lamb and some varieties of fish are also delicious prepared in this way. Fricassees of lamb, chicken and veal are always welcome summer meats.

As a rule the diet should be more vegetarian in summer than in cold weather, when the green herbs, roots and fruits of the earth are in perfection. Wise gardeners arrange the sowing of their crops so that there is a continuous supply of fresh, tender green peas and corn and other choice vegetables from the first picking till the frost appears. It is a little more difficult to insure tender salad greens. Nothing grown for this purpose in the heat of midsummer is ever so crisp and delicious as the lettuce and other plants that spring out of the cool earth in early spring. They are nature's own purifiers of the blood, which has become clogged with the heavy meat diet of winter. Lettuce that grows in a head is not as much cultivated throughout the country as it should be, though it can always be had in Boston, New York and other large markets. The heart leaves of this lettuce make the most delicious salad greens. The dark green leaves that grow on the outside of the head, like the green leaves of cabbage, should be thrown away with the stalk, as they are not fit for salad. Only the bleached head, which is crispy and cream white, is used.

There is no excuse for heavy desserts in summer. Light batter puddings are almost the only hot pudding suitable for warm weather. The variety of cold custards, iced desserts and creams are so large that there is no excuse for greasy, rich pies and puddings. Good housekeepers need not be reminded that perfectly ripe fruit is to be served in perfection ice cold, but never iced. —New York Tribune.

Recipes.

HOP BEER.—Two handfuls of hops, two pailfuls of cold water, [illegible] put it in a keg to ferment, and next day it may be drank.

STEWED SMALL FRUIT.—Persons with whom many of the small fruits, especially currants and strawberries, disagree when eaten raw, can eat them with impunity if they are stewed. Allow from one-quarter to one-half pound of sugar to each pound of fruit, according to its acidity, and stew only until done. This is an excellent way to prepare fruit for children.

BERRY FRITTERS.—Mix a batter of one cup of flour, one-half teaspoonful of baking-powder, a pinch of salt, two eggs, one tablespoonful of olive oil or melted butter. Sift the flour, salt and powder together; add the oil, the eggs, well beaten, and the milk. The batter should be of a consistency that it will run in a continuous stream. Mix any berries with this—whortleberries, blackberries, raspberries, etc.—in the proportion of one cupful of berries to one and a half of batter. Drop in tablespoonfuls in hot lard, and fry a light brown. Serve with sugar or sauce.

CHICKEN SOUP WITH CREAM.—Three pints of the water in which a chicken has been boiled, with all fat removed, one pint of rich cream, four eggs, one cupful of bread-crumbs, salt, pepper and celery salt. Heat the water to the boiling point. Boil the eggs twenty-five minutes and mash the yolk with the bread crumbs which should be softened in a little milk. Heat the cream to near boiling, stir it gradually into the eggs and crumbs, pour the mixture into the chicken water and boil five minutes. Season to taste with salt, pepper and celery salt, and a little onion, if preferred. Toasted crackers may be added.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

Two Hours the Limit on Reception Days in Future.

Now for a novelty, etiquettically, Society has had all the oolong, souchong and orange pekoe she intends to drink. The tea caddy, tea ball and teacups have been put behind the glass doors of the dining cabinet and the big shining samovar holds a pot of maidenhair fern and ornaments a niche in the lower hall.

Briefly, teas have had their day. But that is not all. The reception day has been abolished and instead of having her day Mme. Aufait has her hours, two a week when she is on toilette, and one minute before or two seconds after she may receive or repulse a visitor, as the humor suits her, without giving offense. This innovation comes, according to The World, from the society leaders who are in Paris and London revising the code. On a big white card of college commencement size Mrs. Title Hunter and daughter's names appear. In one corner is the address and opposite "Lundi de 4-6," which means that at no other time are the ladies officially at home. Heretofore the visitor might drop in for a friendly chat at any hour of the reception day between lunch and 9 o'clock, certain of finding a welcome and a buffet spread of tea, wafers, salted almonds and æstheticism.

Fresh flowers perfumed the air and the hostess and her aids wore their daintiest gowns. Now the tedium of waiting, the fatigue of long pauses and the discomfort of sitting about in standup toilets and light slippers has been done away with and the whole system of receiving and entertaining crowded into two hours of exactly sixty minutes each. In that time a substantial lunch of bouillon cups, claret punch, biscuit, pate de foie gras, caviare, tongue and beef sandwiches is spread, and may be consumed or rejected. In place of the æsthetic beauty who tied ribbons on the sandwiches and tea cup handles stands a big head waiter, and silver flagons fill the table ends occupied by the chocolate urn and samovar.

It is claimed that Edison's new phonograph fulfils the principal requirements of an acoumeter instrument for measuring the hearing.

KNOW HOW —TO— KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders. They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

CHAPTER VI.

"Is he dead?" asked Ruric, starting quickly forward.

"Hold, my son," uttered the monk, laying his hand upon the young man's arm. "Surely you have nothing to fear. It was none of your work—no more than if you had run your sword to the heart of a wild beast that had attacked you."

"But I did not touch his heart," quickly returned the youth. "I was careful of that. I would have struck him upon the head with the flat of my sword, but I feared I might break his skull."

"He is not dead yet," answered the surgeon, as Ruric pressed forward and asked a second time. "He has only fainted from the shock of the blow, coupled with his own fears and passions."

"But will he die?" Ruric asked kneeling down by the fallen man's side.

"I can not yet tell," the doctor said, at the same time wiping the blood away, which was flowing freely.

"But why not probe the wound now?" suggested the monk. "Now is the best time, for the place is not yet inflamed; and while he is thus insensible he will be free from pain."

The surgeon [illegible] the truth and propriety of this, and he proceeded to act upon the suggestion. Having selected a probe which appeared applicable, he examined the wound. Ruric watched him eagerly, and with a painful expression.

"I do not think this wound is mortal," the surgeon reported, as he carefully felt his way along the course the steel had taken. "It has passed below the right lung, and only severed some of the smaller blood-vessels. I think, with proper care, he may recover."

"Thank God!" fervently ejaculated Ruric, with his hands clasped.

"But why so anxious?" asked Urson. "You were ready enough to accept his challenge."

"Aye—else you would have called me coward," returned the gun-maker with a flashing eye. "Had I refused to meet him that fatal word would have met me at every turn. I knew that such a man as he was no cope for me at any game where strength of arm and sleight of hand were required. So I meant to disarm him, and then give him up his life, believing that such a move would end the combat. You know how I labored to spare him. But I could not. Yet I would not have the life of a fellow-being—a countryman upon my hands in such a quarrel. My father died fighting for his country—and so would I die if my death must come from the hand of man; but to die thus would be a curse upon my name, and to inflict such death upon another would be a curse in my memory."

"I believe you, my son," the monk said, "Only if the Count dies you should not allow such feelings as you mention to overcome you. In no way are you to blame for this."

"True, father—you speak truly," added the surgeon. "The young man has acted most nobly, and no blame can be attached to him."

Ruric seemed somewhat relieved by these assurances, and having seen the Count's wound dressed, and assisted in bearing the insensible form to the sledge, he took Alaric's proffered arm and proceeded to his own team.

"Who is that monk?" asked the lieutenant, as they entered their sledge.

"I only know that he is called Valdimir," returned Ruric. "I have only seen him once before. Have you ever seen him ere this?"

"Yes—several times about our barracks. He has been there when some of our poor fellows have been sick and dying. He seems to be a good-hearted man, and, I should judge, quite intelligent."

"I agree with you there," our hero said. "I think he is a good man; but there is nevertheless a mystery about him which I cannot solve. His countenance is familiar to me, and yet I cannot tell where, nor when, I have seen him."

"Aye," added Alaric quickly and eagerly; "that is precisely the case with me. I am very sure that I have seen that man under different circumstances. And others of our company have thought the same."

The two men watched the movements of the monk while they thus spoke, and they noticed that he entered his sledge and drove off towards Borodino.

"Ruric," said the lieutenant, after they had ridden some little distance, and at the same time gazing wonderingly into his companion's face, "you handle the sword like a magician. By my soul, I'd give all I own at this present moment—my commission and all—if I could handle the sword as you can."

"I do understand the weapon passing well," returned the youth modestly; "but I have worked hard to gain the science."

"Ah—'tis not all science," the officer added. "That wondrous strength of yours is a host in itself."

"And yet," said Ruric, "I have seen weaker men than myself who would overcome me easily—or, at least, who might overcome me."

"But they were not in this city," suggested Orsa, with a peculiar shake of the head.

"True, Alaric. I am not in the habit of mentioning my own powers; but yet I may say that there is no man in Moscow who is my superior in the use of any sort of offensive arms."

The lieutenant readily admitted the truth of this, and then the conversation turned upon the subject of the Count, and the course he had pursued with respect to the event which had just transpired. This conversation lasted until they reached the door of Ruric's residence, and having thanked his friend for his kindness, and expressed the hope that at some time he might have opportunity to return some adequate favor, the gunmaker entered the house.

The widow sat in her great chair by the fire. She was pale and anxious. Her brow was supported by her hands, and at every sound from without she would start up with a frightened expression and listen. At length the sound of bells struck upon her ear—they came nearer and nearer—and they stopped at her door. She would have arisen, but she could not. With her hands clasped she bent eagerly forward, and listened with a frantic interest. Soon the door opened. Surely no one but he would enter without knocking. She started to her feet—the inner door opened—a male form stood before her.

"Mother!"

"Ruric! My boy! Safe!"

She tottered forward and sank upon the bosom of her noble son, and while she wound her arms tightly about him she murmured her thanks to God.

By and by the widow became more calm, but still there was an earnest, eager look of fear upon her face. Ruric saw it, and he knew well what it meant.

"Mother," he said, "the Count is not dead."

"Nor wounded?" she uttered, quickly and eagerly.

"Yes—badly. But listen: I could not help it." And thereupon he related all the circumstances connected with the conflict. When he had concluded, his mother pondered a few moments, and then she said:

"Surely, my son, I will try and suffer nothing from this, even should the wicked man die. In all you acted but upon the defensive. From the first he has only been intent on attacking you; and on the battle-ground he would have killed you if he could."

"More surely he would, mother. Aye—he would not have hesitated to stab me in the back could he have gained the opportunity. He was mad beyond all self-control, and his eagerness to kill me was only equaled by his chagrin at being overcome by one whom he had hoped easily to conquer."

After this Ruric went to his shop, but Paul manifested no great emotion upon beholding him.

"You seem to take it as a matter of course that I should return alive and well," said the gun-maker with a smile.

"Why—of course," returned the boy, composedly. "What would a score of such men as he be to you?"

Conrad Damonoff [illegible] sword before Ruric [illegible]. No, I only smiled when I heard his challenge. I should have as soon thought of being anxious about your return from a marten hunt."

THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION.

Dr. Burt Explains His New Theory to the Chicago Medical Society.

CHICAGO, July 26.—The announcement that Dr. W. H. Burt would explain a new theory on the cure of consumption caused a large audience at to-night's meeting of the Chicago Medical Society at the Grand Pacific Hotel. Dr. Burt's paper was masterly in its exhaustive treatment of the disease. He did not disappoint his audience in the absolute novelty of his theory. Eight months ago, when reading of the wonderful change brought about in the obesity of Prince Bismarck, through his refraining from the use of water and carbohydrates, it occurred to him that an opposite treatment ought to result in the cure of all wasting diseases. His experiments since have justified him in the statement that excessive eating and the excessive use of water will cure 50 per cent. of all consumptive cases in their first and second stages. He explained at length the fat's influence and power in building up tissue possessed by water, which forms three-fourths of the human body, and stated that even in health six pints a day were necessary to meet the water waste, and in disease twelve pints, charged with carbolic acid. The doctor claimed it would give the very life to the system and tissues demanded in consumption. He pronounced the bacteria theory, so popular of late as pure nonsense. In detail his treatment consisted of the free use of water every hour in the day, nine hours sleep, regular and not exhaustive out-door exercise, if possible the sea or mountain air. Above all, the patient must look upon the drinking of water for all time as his life. Heredity was the great danger, and Dr. Burt advocated the passing by Congress of a law forbidding the marriage of consumptives. With this in force, 100 years from now consumption would not exist in the United States.

AGAINST THEIR PRESIDENT.

A Report of a Revolution in Guatemala—War Surmises.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—A telegram has been received at the State Department from United States Minister Mizner at Guatemala saying that consternation prevails at that place over rumors that the Government troops had been defeated in an engagement with the Salvadorian army. The Minister's telegram gives evidence that he has not received the department's instructions in regard to the case of the steamship Colima, and steps will be taken to discover the cause of the delay.

Spanish Warships en Route.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 27.—The Spanish Minister here says two Spanish warships have been ordered to Central America. A large amount of counterfeit silver is in circulation here. Several revolutionary bands are marauding near the Mexican frontier in Guatemalan territory. Both Guatemala and San Salvador are trying to mass troops with the utmost haste, but Guatemala finds difficulty in the dissatisfaction of her soldiers. Guatemala despatches claim that the Guatemalan forces so greatly outnumber the Salvadorians that in the present week the tables will be turned.

Another Guatemalan Story.

RICHFIELD SPRINGS, N.Y., July 27.—A cipher despatch received here to-day by an official of the Guatemalan Government says Guatemala accepts the war provoked by San Salvador and will continue it until San Salvador elects a legitimate President in place of Ezeta. The battle fought on July 26, the despatch regrets, resulted in the rout of the San Salvadorians, but as Salvador commands the cable to Central America the government only gives despatches favorable to [illegible]. The telegram further asserts that the arms taken by the steamer Colima were taken with the consent of the Pacific Mail agent [illegible] of arms [illegible]. Honduras [illegible] remain neutral [illegible] with Guatemala. Guatemala has [illegible] men 6000, while San Salvador has [illegible] 10,000.

Arbitration Out of the Question.

SAN ANTONIO, July 27.—Senor Romero, Mexican Minister at Washington, passed through here yesterday en route to the City of Mexico. Senor Romero said the Central American war was a very bad thing and the ruptures had progressed to where arbitration was absolutely out of the question.

MAN OVERBOARD.

How He is Picked up by a Man-of-War

When the cry "Man overboard!" is heard on board a man-of-war it acts upon the ship's company with an instant pressure as does the beat to quarters. Every man has a place assigned to him on the watch bill for this emergency, and there is no duty required of him that he performs more readily and zealously than this. He knows that the life of a shipmate may depend upon his promptness, and that what has happened to another may happen to him. Even the veriest shirk will spring to his station with alacrity and work with zeal.

It is astonishing how few sailors know how to swim, and until late years even our naval officers had no instruction in the art. Now the naval cadets have a regular training, and there is no excuse for an officer failing to swim. In the old-time navy the only way that could be depended on for teaching the seaman how to swim was to hang a topmast stu'nsail from the outer end of the lower stu'nsail boom, the inner end supported from the forechains in a curve with about four feet deep of water in the belly of the sail. In this shallow space the beginners could venture and learn from the experienced swimmers. This arrangement is imperative in waters where sharks are plentiful since the sail is sufficient to keep the man-eaters off, and no one would dare to go outside of it.

The work is to be done in picking up a sailor who has fallen overboard depends, of course, largely on the ship and the circumstances belonging to each case. In a steamer without sails the evolution is very different from that performed in a ship depending wholly or partly on sail power. The direction and the force of the wind and the amount of sea play important part in the drama. But the usual routine is something as follows:

The officer of the deck at once brings the ship "by the wind," shortening sail as necessary; then the maintopsail—if the ship be square rigged—is thrown aback to check the headway; if under steam the engines are backed till the ship is still in the water. Generally the lee life buoy is dropped as soon as the cry is heard, although a trained lookout will look over the side, and not pull the lanyard until the man is close under the stern. A lookout is always stationed at the life buoys, which are hung one in each quarter.

Simultaneously with the orders for reducing sail, heaving to and dropping the buoy the officer of the deck sends the lifeboat's crew to their boat. The two quarter boats are usually left swung out, with their tackles coiled down on deck ready for lowering. The gripes, or broad canvas bands that go around the boat and hold it fast against the davits at sea, are fitted with a quick action hook by which in one motion they can be cast off. The regular crew for the lifeboat in each watch quickly assemble into the lee quarter boat, prepare their oars for use and tend the patent unhooking device, if there is one. The coxswain prepares to ship his steering oar, and the plug is put in. Then the men at the lowering tackles lower the boat several feet, and all is ready. Just at the bottom of a lee roll, when the headway is nearly stopped, the patent unhooking apparatus is let go, the boat drops a foot or two into the water, the men out oars and give way toward the life buoy.

Meantime, whether by day or night, a quartermaster jumps into the rigging as soon as the buoy is let go, and it is his duty to keep an eye on the buoy all the time. Then when the boat is away he directs how the coxswain shall steer by waving a small signal flag to the right or left as may be necessary to put the boat on the right course.

The quicker the boat gets away the better the chance of finding and saving the man. I have known it to take seven minutes where the boat was extra well secured on account of heavy weather, and I have seen the ship stopped, the boat dropped, the man and buoy picked up, the boat hoisted and the ship on her course again in nine minutes.—[New York Herald.

NEWS OF THE OLD WORLD

BRITISH NAVAL OFFICERS' ACTIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

The Legality of the Proceedings to Be Tried in a Court of Law—The Heligoland Cession Bill Passes Its Third Reading in the House of Commons.

LONDON, July 28.—In the House of Commons to-day Sir James Fergusson said that as the legality of the actions of the British naval officers in Newfoundland will be tried by a court of law, it was not desirable to state under what imperial law of prerogative the Crown office instructions had been framed.

The Heligoland bill passed the third reading in the House of Commons to-day.

The Muenchener Zeitung says Bavarian carriages will meet Prince Bismarck at Kissengin and will be placed at his disposal as in former years.

Martial law has been proclaimed in the Kroon quarters of Constantinople, which is patrolled. Several arrests have been made.

A Terrible Railway Collision.

MANCHESTER, July 28.—A fearful accident happened at 9½ this afternoon in the new Manchester ship canal which will entail heavy loss of life. Two workmen's trains, through some unexplained stupidity of a switchman, collided. Ten workmen were instantly killed and sixty others wounded, of whom at least thirty will die.

According to later advices three men were killed and nine seriously hurt.

Vienna's Beauty Contest.

VIENNA, July 28.—The following directions have been given for those ladies who wish to compete in the International Beauty Contest here: All competitors must send photographs, with their addresses, to the committee. Those who are admitted must attend in evening dress, or costume representative of the country from which they come. The committee state that should the competitors desire it, traveling expenses and the cost of living here for five days will be paid out of the funds at the disposal of the managers. Each lady who is in the competition will receive a souvenir of the occasion. The total sum to be awarded to the winner is $1200.

The Visit Postponed.

BERLIN, July 28.—Prince Bismarck's proposed visit to England has been postponed. He will go to Kissingen in the middle of August.

Robbing the Dead.

LONDON, July 28.—A sensation is reported from Landshut, in lower Bavaria, over the discovery that the cemetery keepers have been robbing the bodies of the rich dead during the past two years. Clothes, ornaments and even hair have been stolen, while the costly caskets have been replaced by plain pine coffins. General exhumations have been ordered and the ghouls have been arrested.

Brigands Killed.

CANEA, Crete, July 28.—A detachment of gendarmes surprised a number of brigands in a cave on this island and killed and wounded four of them. The gendarmes discovered large stores of ammunition and provisions.

MEN OF GREENWOOD.

Canadian Foresters Hold Their Annual Demonstration at Hamilton.

HAMILTON, July 28.—About 2500 Foresters from Toronto, Brantford, Galt, Stratford, London and other points joined the local body to-day in the celebration of the 145th anniversary of the institution of the order. The organization stands to-day second to no other of its kind. On its membership rolls there are inscribed the names of upward of 750,000 members. In its treasury there is stored away $25,500,000, and all over the civilized globe there are found courts of the order. On the membership list are found the names of 36 peers, 14 sons of peers, 8 bishops, 43 baronets, 6 judges, 30 knights, and no less than 221 members of the British Parliament, besides innumerable persons of rank and title in the colonies and foreign countries.

The Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo men were at work to-day filling up the gully and leveling up the line for the three tracks at the entrance to the Bay-street tunnel. There will be two tracks in the tunnel.

At the meeting of the City Council tonight Ald. Ryckman presented a scheme for the annexation of part of the Township of Barton.

Three small boys named Mellrose Mandel, John Harris and James Powell were convicted at the Police Court this morning of tapping John H. Kerr's till. Sentence was reserved.

"Prof." Gant preferred a charge against John Meadows and his son of using insulting language. Defendants had called the "professor's" son a "nigger." The Police Magistrate dismissed the case.

Seizure of the American Fishing Schooner Hattie Evelyn at Bay St. George—How a Yankee Ignoramus Would Retaliate Upon the Dominion.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The case of the seizure of the American fishing schooner Hattie Evelyn at Bay St. George, Nfld., has been brought to the attention of senators by Mr. Steele, president of the American Fishery Union. The statement Mr. Steele has forwarded from Gloucester shows that the schooner went into Bay St. George for the single purpose of purchasing bait. Payment of $16 lighthouse dues was demanded and made under protest.

The captain was then notified he could not purchase bait until he had procured a license therefor at an expense of $65. He protested against this in vain and was compelled to go elsewhere in search of bait. His plea that under the treaty of 1818 he was entitled to purchase bait was without avail.

A senator who has had occasion to look up the law says ample remedy is lodged in the hands of the President. In such a case he is authorized and by implication it is made his duty to close the ports of the United States to Canadian vessels. He should say to those vessels coming to Gloucester with cargoes of fish: "Please stay out until our vessels are permitted to enter your ports for legitimate commercial purposes, in accordance with treaty rights secured by them."

HOW'S THIS, MR. BLAINE?

The Habits of the Seal—The Value of the Fishing Grounds.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—A curious point is suggested by Capt. Bonnet, who during the last administration was at the head of the Revenue Marine Service of the United States, which may have had some bearing upon one of Mr. Blaine's unanswered conundrums. Captain Bonnet suggests that the explanation of the condition of things which seems to puzzle Mr. Blaine may be in the fact that it is only since 1886 that the official knowledge has been obtained of the habits of the seals in Behring Sea to make their capture in transit to the island to their feeding grounds so profitable an undertaking as it is now. It took Pribylof, the discoverer of the islands which bear his name and which are the chief resort of the seals in Behring Sea, three years to discover and locate the islands, shrouded as they are in perpetual fog; but he knew they must exist, and devoted all his time to finding them.

It is only within the last six years that it has been discovered that there are certain shoals about 60 miles from land to which the seals resort in vast numbers at the close of the breeding season and gorge themselves to satiety on the fish which exist there in inexhaustible quantities. Their capture on these feeding grounds is an easy matter. In fact they are frequently taken by hand as they lie asleep on the surface of the water. The sealing schooners take on board the Inuit Indians with their light canoes, who sometimes harpoon two or three hundred seals a day, or the vessels themselves spread out gill nets and gather them in by the thousands. Before this peculiarity in the habits of the seal was discovered, Capt. Bonnet says, it was not a particularly profitable thing to devote a voyage entirely to seal fishing. It was resorted to rather as an incident. Now vessels which previously thought they were doing well if they brought home a few hundred skins bring them in by the thousand, and the industry is so enormously profitable that the profits of one trip will fit out five or six vessels for the next trip. This perhaps explains the Canadian anxiety to have the open sea seal fisheries continued.

No Cause for War.

NEW YORK, July 28.—The World says: All talk about war with Great Britain concerning Behring Sea difficulties is pure moonshine. It is perfectly true that this country is capable of taking care of its honor, and will not hesitate about going to war when its honor is involved. Any real attack upon the rights of American citizens will certainly be resented to the utmost and no American is afraid of the result.

The country's honor, however, is not involved in this Behring Sea affair. We have no right to the jurisdiction which has been claimed. We might as well, in fact, contend that none but American citizens should fish for cod on the Banks of Newfoundland. Whatever difficulty we are in is due to an unfortunate statute and a worse than unfortunate contract.

The United States do not lack self-respect. They have altogether too much to permit them to engage in a wasteful and wicked war for the purpose of maintaining a company of speculators in the enjoyment of a monopoly. The call to war sounds strangely in these days when arbitration is the first thought of nations which have a difference of opinion. This Republic will fight when the time comes, as it has always fought, but there is happily no sign that the time is near at hand. No human blood will be shed for the account of the seal-catchers. The cause for war must be more dignified than can be tortured out of our present relations with Great Britain.

Sealers Have Done Well.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—The schooner Dashing Wave arrived here to-day from Sand Point, Alaska, bringing news of the sealing fleet. The sealing vessels have all done well, having caught from 600 to 1200 seals each. This year sealers rendezvoused at Konishi Island instead of Sand Point. All the sealers, 17 in number, have left for Behring Sea. The British schooner Lily did not appear, and fears are entertained for her safety. The revenue cutter Rush arrived at Sand Point on July 10 and left two days later for Ounalaska.

SIX HUNDRED HOMELESS.

The Mining Village of Pilley's Island, N.F., Destroyed.

PILLEY'S ISLAND, Nfld., July 28.—A fire, which broke out at 5 o'clock last evening in the woods surrounding the Standard Pyrites Company's mines, has devastated the village and rendered 600 persons homeless. It was only through the brave efforts of the miners and some New York tourists that the powder magazines and the mine were saved. Hundreds spent the night in open boats on the [illegible] small islands.

Sad Disappointment for Newport.

HALIFAX, July 28.—It is now stated by the naval authorities here that the war ship Thrush, in command of Prince George of Wales, will not visit Newport, R.I. She left Bermuda this morning for Halifax direct. The flagship Bellerophon, with Admiral Watson and Sir John Ross on board, sailed from St. John's yesterday for Newport, and will be joined en route by the Canada and Partridge, which left this morning. It is said that Prince George had no intention of going to Newport.

LORD BOYLE DISCOVERED.

The Long-Lost Heir to An Earldom Turns Up—Strange Meeting Between Two Brothers.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The World says: "According to report from Washington, which, it may be assumed, emanates from the British Legation, and which was subsequently corroborated by an English resident of New York, this city was last week the scene of as strange a meeting between two brothers as any in fiction, and one that is surrounded, besides, by an atmosphere of romance and adventure such as the somewhat prosaic conditions of life on the other side of the Mississippi River supply.

"One brother was a young English barrister, fresh from the Inner Temple; the other a bronzed and athletic frontiersman, long cut off from the influences of civilization and family life. The frontiersman, according to the authorities quoted, was Viscount Boyle, the missing heir of the earldom of Shannon in the peerage of Ireland, who was thought to have been lost in the western wilds of the United States or Canada, for whom his family have been advertising in American and Canadian papers for nearly a year. His younger brother came to America as a last resort and determined to personally follow the faint trace which Viscount Boyle left behind him. He received intelligence of him soon after he reached New York. Here he anxiously awaited the viscount's arrival and when the long-parted brothers were united they lost no time, but hastened home and sailed hence last Wednesday on the Teutonic.

"The story of the wanderings of Viscount Boyle in Canada and the United States, his cowboy life and adventures in the western country, his mysterious disappearance in the vast unexplored regions of the Canadian northwest provinces before his father died and the historical Shannon peerage descended to him make up a romance such as even the records of houses in British peerage have rarely equalled. From time to time vague and conflicting rumors reached Montreal, New York and London that Viscount Boyle was in California, that he had gone to Alaska and that he died fighting Indians and was buried at Regina, in the Northwest. It seems, however, that the vigorous search which had been kept up, covering, as it did, an area of many hundreds of thousands of square miles of Western Canada and America, and reaching into unknown or little explored lands and territories, ultimately narrowed down to one clue which, being quickly followed, revealed the missing heir enthusiastically pursuing the adventurous life he loved so well. When he heard that he was Lord Shannon apparently he lost no time in rejoining civilization. Boyle is now 30 years of age and unmarried. His arrival in Ireland this week will undoubtedly be hailed with delight by very many personal and family friends."

CAREER OF A MISSING YOUNG MAN.

A Successful Detective in Montreal and a Thief in Chicago.

CHICAGO, July 28.—An interesting story is brought out by the disappearance to-day of Frank Hayner, an employe of Charles Peckham & Co., insurance adjusters. It is reported that prior to leaving the city Hayner committed a number of forgeries, Peckham & Co. being among the victims. Hayner arrived in Chicago about 18 months ago "broke," hungry and dilapidated. He had known Mr. Peckham years ago in Brooklyn, from which city both men came, and where Hayner is most respectably connected. He was supplied with both money and work by his former townsman, and until a few months ago conducted himself as a model of business energy and rectitude.

The alias of "Wilson," by which he was frequently addressed by strangers, was to the majority of Hayner's acquaintances a source of mystery. Unravelled, it shows that this is by no means the first time that Mr. Hayner has been mixed up in crooked transactions. Young Hayner's first exploit of note was about three years ago. For two years prior to that time Montreal merchants had been systematically robbed by an organized band of burglars. The merchants held a secret conference with Chief Paradis, and declared that the police force was in league with the burglars. Hayner was at the time a private detective in Brooklyn and owing to some Canadian connections, he was selected to keep watch on the Montreal police force. Under the name of Frank Wilson he secured evidence against Detective Fahey, Detective Naegele, a son of sub-Chief Naegele and others connected with the Montreal police force. As a result of Wilson's work Fahey and other members of the police force were found guilty, and are now serving their time in the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.

Hayner left Montreal and went to England with the John L. Sullivan party as assistant-treasurer.

REFUSED TO SELL TO NEGROES.

He Was a Negro Himself, but Discriminated Against His Race.

BALTIMORE, July 28.—Secretary Windom has issued an order to Postmaster Johnson to remove George Hughes, a colored man who for twenty years has had a stand on the postoffice pavement, where he sold lemonade and egg flip in summer and other seasonable articles in winter, if the charges made against him are true. A complaint was recently lodged against Hughes by colored men, charging that in the conduct of his business he discriminated against them. Hughes had a very large patronage, members of the corn and flour and the various other exchanges going there. When a colored man asked for a "flip" or a "shake" Hughes generally happened to be out of sugar or lemon or milk. He was quite diplomatic and the discrimination was not noticed until this week, when a large number of laborers were employed in the vicinity digging. Then the colored men became indignant at the refusal to serve them, while the white laborers could get all the refreshments they wanted.

The McKinley Tariff Bill.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The Republican members of the Senate committee on finance to-day considered several amendments to the tariff bill which will be proposed when the schedules to which they relate are reached in the discussion. They are said to be largely formal. Some of them intend to correct errors in the print; others make slight increases in several schedules restoring the rates named in the bill as it passed the House. A conference of the Republican members will be held shortly to determine upon a policy with respect to the reciprocity amendments pending, also with respect to the resolution of Senator Teller proposing an international bi metallic arrangement.

BLOOD STILL FLOWS.

CONTINUOUS FIGHTING IN BUENOS AYRES.

The Minister of War Wounded and the Finance Minister Captured by the Insurgents—The Navy Joins in the Revolt—The President's Residence Shelled.

LONDON, July 29.—The Times has the following from Buenos Ayres dated July 27:

Noon—Fighting began yesterday at dawn and ceased at dark, both sides maintaining their positions. Celman's troops and cavalry suffered terribly in attacking the civicas and troops. The provisionals were intrenched in an artillery barracks. The city during the night was like a city of the dead, but behind their shutters the citizens were on the alert armed with rifles. After nightfall the civicas advanced two blocks.

The provisionals reopened a heavy artillery fire at dawn to-day on the troops under Vice-President Pellegrini.

A terrible mistake occurred during the fighting. The Eleventh regiment, suddenly turning in favor of the provisional government, approached the artillery, and before they could make their friendly intentions known to the insurgents they were mown down within a narrow street.

11 a.m.—Celman's officials assert that the civicas are treating for a surrender but this is disbelieved. Forty-six cannon have arrived for Celman's forces, also 1200 troops. The foreign ministers have instructed the commanders of the American, British and Spanish gunboats if the fleet resume bombarding to protest jointly that it is contrary to the rules of war to bombard an open city without notice. Celman has just arrived at the Government house. He will confer with the Ministers and generals. The polyglot population has almost entirely held aloof from the fighting. Only some Italians have joined the civicas.

3 p.m.—The Government troops have resumed firing. The streets leading to the Plaza Mayo are blocked with bales of hay. Celman offered terms to the civicas, promising not to proceed against civilians surrendering and to permit officers supporting the civicas to resign. The troops of the civicas show no signs of yielding. Celman's troops tried to carry the artillery positions of the civicas but were repulsed with heavy loss.

5½ p.m.—The chiefs of the Union Civica have accepted Celman's terms. The troops hailed the decision with vivas. Firing has been resumed.

The Minister of War was wounded, the Minister of Finance was taken prisoner. Col. Malmarmendia, Major Campos and many other officers were killed, and the commander of the firemen was shot by his own men.

A short armistice was held at noon and an effort was made to stop the butchery. The armistice lasted one hour. At 1 o'clock the ships began firing on the Government House, Pellegrini having refused to accept the terms of the provisional government. The Civica Union seized 20 tugboats and the gun-boats Chacabuco, Maspu, Cannanade and Retiro. The British gunboats Beagle and Bramble have arrved to protect the English inhabitants.

3 p.m.—The whole navy has declared in favor of the provisional government. The Patagonia is bombarding the Government house and the Parana is shelling President Celman's residence. Gunboats command the railroads from the North.

4 p.m.—The warships have ceased bombarding. Bulletins announce that the revolution has triumphed. It is certain that the provisionals up to the present hour have got the best of the fighting. Armistice negotiations continue at the Government house. The adherents of Celman are positive that 3000 troops and 40 pieces of artillery are ready when the armistice is over to attack the civicas.

MONDAY, 9 a.m.—President Celman's troops have occupied the houses around the Plaza Mayo and have placed light artillery in the plaza. The demands of the Civica Union have been reduced to a request that Celman resign. The fleet lies a good way out with steam up. The armistice has been extended until 2 o'clock.

VICTORIES FOR SALVADOR.

War News Interdicted By the Guatemalan Authorities.

SAN SALVADOR, July 28.—It is reported there from unofficial sources that the Salvadorian troops have made an advance from Otescatempo on Jutiapa and again met the Guatemalan army with the usual disastrous results to the latter, which had been again badly defeated and was in full retreat on Jutiapa, followed by the victorious Salvadorians. The Guatemalan authorities have interdicted all war news passing over their [illegible] and wires via Mexico, whether favorable or not to Guatemalan interests. The Mexican minister in Guatemala has protested against the interruption of international telegrams as a violation of the Mexico-Guatemala telegraph convention of 1888.

When the first telegrams were forwarded through to the City of Mexico from Guatemala over the land line the Mexican consul-general in Guatemala, Senor Diaz de Bonilla, had laid a complaint before the Mexican Government, charging the Guatemalan government with suppressing telegrams of merchants and others, even those which contain no war notes. Senor Bonilla, who is also general agent for the Mexican national telegraph system, has to send his telegrams by mail to this port, and there have them transmitted by submarine cable to their destination at much greater cost than by land lines.

Two glorious victories for Salvador have been fully confirmed, one at Chingo in Guatemala, in the department of Santa Rosa, and the other at Otescatempo, in the department of Jutiapa. Great consternation prevails in Guatemala over the news of these two disasters to her army. Fresh revolutionary outbreaks have been initiated in San Marcos, in the Mexican frontier, led by Gen. Daniel Marroquin, who was declared a general by Barillas two years ago, and who is said to be working in the interest of exiled Gen. Martin Barankdine, and the latter himself is quite close to the Mexico-Guatemalan boundary with arms and troops.

The Salvadorians Advancing.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 28.—A La Libertad despatch says the censorship over telegrams only refers to the Guatemalan Government and that other despatches are allowed a free course. The Guatemalan authorities have cut the land lines connecting with the outside.

There is the greatest enthusiasm among the Salvadorians. General Rivas with 6000 Indians from Cojutepque has reinforced Ezeta's army.

There are rumors of another defeat of the Guatemalans, who are still retreating. The Salvadorians are advancing.

A CONSTITUTIONAL DIFFERENCE.

The discussion between Mr. Blaine, United States Secretary of State, and Congressman McKinley illustrates a difference between the United States and Canadian constitutions, and it is a difference in which Canada has the advantage. Mr. McKinley is a Republican, as is Mr. Blaine, but as the latter has no seat in Congress—is precluded from having a seat there while holding office, Mr. McKinley leads the party in the House. A tariff bill was introduced by Mr. McKinley which, among other changes, proposed to remove the duties from sugar, Mr. Blaine does not desire to have that done at present, because he was using the sugar duties as a lever to secure concessions from certain southern sugar-growing countries and this bill would take the lever out of his hands and thus hamper his efforts to extend trading privileges. In Canada such a thing could not happen, for those who in this country administer the affairs of the country must be members of Parliament and as such are always in a position to propose, explain and defend their policy, but Mr. Blaine cannot address Congress except through the newspapers. Further a Canadian administration only holds office so long as it is in accord with the House of Commons, and a disagreement on matters of policy between Parliament and the administration cannot last. They must be in accord, or the administration must give way to one that will be in accord with Parliament. But in the United States Mr. Blaine remains in office though his policy is in opposition to that of Congress. He may be carrying on negotiations that, successfully terminated, would be of benefit to the country, and Congress may take an action that would thwart all his efforts, yet he cannot open his mouth in the assembly to explain his position or to direct the legislation. Responsible government may have its drawbacks, but the United States system seems to be far removed from perfection.

MONTMORENCY.

The election of Mr. Desjardins, the Conservative candidate, in Montmorency was a surprise to the Liberals and they are at their wits' end trying to explain it. The county was represented by Mr. Langelier, a Liberal, who resigned to join Mr. Mercier in the Quebec Legislature, thus causing a vacancy for the Commons. When the election to fill this vacancy came on the Liberals felt sure of holding the seat, but the result is that Mr. Laurier will have one less follower in the House next session and Sir John Macdonald one more. One paper opposed to the Dominion Government says that Mr. Desjardins' opponent was a Nationalist, and not a straight Liberal, and that that helped the Government candidate, but that is denied by another Liberal paper, which says the Liberal candidate was a straight Liberal, and thus are the excuses shattered by themselves. One thing is clear, however, and that is that although Mr. Laurier stumped the county and preached unrestricted reciprocity to the electors, his candidate was defeated. There is another satisfactory feature in the result. During the contest strong appeals were made to the French-Canadian electors to vote against Mr. Desjardins because he was a supporter of that "old Orangeman" Sir John Macdonald and the Riel cry was freely used to injure the Government. It is satisfactory to know that such tactics failed, as they should.

Making a Reduction.

"Strawberries, ma'am?" queried the huckster as she stood in the door of her house in Jersey City, according to the New York Sun.

"How much?" she cautiously inquired.

"Twelve cents a quart, ma'am, or two quarts for 25 cents."

"Oh! Well, I'll take two quarts."

"Exactly, ma'am."

He measured out the berries, got his quarter and drove off, while she disappeared in the house. She came out again after a couple of minutes however, looked up and down the street, and not being able to see him anywhere she shook her fist in the direction he took and exclaimed:

"I'll know him by the wart on his nose and I'll get even with him if it takes a year!"

FARM AND GARDEN

ITEMS OF INTEREST TO FARMERS AND HORTICULTURISTS.

Mulch for Orchards—Ornamenting Old Stumps—Feed the Cow—The Manure Heap—Right Kind of Food—Salt for Cows—Catching Chickens—General Notes.

It is absolutely necessary to supply to the soil such plant food as is lacking. The only question to be decided is how to supply it most economically.

Lime is recommended for use in case of mildew in cucumbers and diseases among potatoes. Powder the lime and shake it through a sieve, being careful to distribute it thoroughly.

It is easy, says Galen Wilson, to prevent cabbage worms from injuring the plants. Just keep the crowns filled with soil. The heads grow up from the bottom and throw off the earth.

Sugar beets should stand from seven to nine inches apart according to the fertility of the soil. Cultivate them flat, give them plenty of sun, stir the ground thoroughly and aim to produce beets weighing about a pound when topped and cleaned.

One man last year used on 20,000 currant bushes 40 pounds of hellebore. This is at the rate of about an ounce to 30 bushes. Every bush had a little hellebore, but if there was no sign of worms only the slightest shake of the box was given in passing.

Small, knotty fruit of any kind is a non-paying article. It is better to grow a dozen berries to make a pint than to grow fifty. With grapes remember that ten bunches weighing fifty pounds will sell better than twenty bunches making the same weight.

Those lands which in Continental Europe are devoted to the grape and produce the best and most costly wines are remarkable for the great amount of phosphoric acid they contain. The soil of the renowned Clos Vougeot vineyard in France contains 4 per cent.

A fifteen-mile journey is an average day's work for a horse. How far does the cow travel in a poor pasture, nipping a pennyweight of grass here and there, to get her daily ration! Then she is expected to pay for it through the milkpail, says the Mirror and Farmer.

While butter is cheap use all the cream and milk in cooking and upon the table that you wish. For vegetables, pie-crust and many other uses in the culinary art cream is far ahead of butter or lard, and should be indulged in by every farmer's and dairyman's family.

Mulch for Orchards.

Mr. Samuel B. Green, in a late letter in the Farm and Fireside, replying to a subscriber's question whether it would be best to keep his orchard completely mulched, and if so with what material, said: "The best mulch for an orchard is a loose top soil. If an orchard is heavily mulched the roots are very liable to come to the surface and be injured if the mulch is removed. Then, it is very apt to stimulate a late fall growth which is not advantageous."

Ornamenting Old Stumps.

An otherwise unsightly old stump, if sawed off rather low, says a contemporary, may be transformed into something quite pretty by placing on it a box filled with earth and planted with ferns and Tradescantia or almost any trailing vine. If something brilliant is wanted, fill the box with scarlet geraniums and let nasturtium trail over the edge. The box can be painted green or be covered with bark tacked on to represent a rustic basket.

Feed the Cow.

Bran and grain are cheap as well as milk. Store them in the cow now, that she may be in good shape to produce milk when better prices rule—we don't mean fat her, but grass alone, and such watery grass as some parts of the country are producing this season, is very poor stuff to build up the system of a cow that is a good milker. Give some bran or grain, or both, to help out—we feed bran and a little cornmeal each day.

The Manure Heap.

Whenever manure is handled it is so much added to the cost; hence any labor required in preparing the food, or reducing the litter before adding it to the heap, is saved when the manure is to be handled. The most disagreeable work on the farm is the handling of manure that is full of cornstalks, straw and other long litter. Manure should be decomposed, and the finer the material that is added to it the quicker its reduction by decomposition.

Right Kind of Food.

Economy in feeding does not refer to reducing the food required, but to regulate it in quality that nothing may be wasted. Much of the food given is simply converted into manure. It does not pay to feed woody fibre and water when more nutritious material is required in order to produce the salable product from an animal.

Salt for Cows.

A dairyman claims that two ounces of salt per day to each cow increased the butter product one-fifth, which indicates that a loss may occur by the failure to supply some inexpensive essential, though the farmer may be feeding liberally and giving his animals the best of care otherwise.

Catching Chickens.

When chickens are to be caught it is best to do it after they have gone to roost. The chasing liable to ensue if one attempts to catch them during the day not only annoys the person in pursuit, but is highly injurious to the fowl. Besides all the other poultry is generally frightened, and more or less injury results from this.

Agricultural Notes.

There is as much in planning as in doing farm work.

Nothing on a farm pays better than a good garden.

Hungarian grass or millet is the best crop to sow in the poultry yard.

The farmer who has advanced to the point of knowing what he is feeding to each animal will not long be satisfied with wasting good feed on inferior stock.

Always give an abundance of room for the storage of surplus honey. When bees fill all available space with honey they will make preparations to swarm.

From recent observations it is stated that there is reason for believing that fresh dirt thrown upon potato leaves when wet starts the mildew on the leaf, which later in the season results in blight.

Earth-worms, in dry weather, sometimes work their way through the soil to the well and fall in, thus contaminating the water to a certain extent. If possible the curbing of all wells should be cemented.

Wherever weeds grow luxuriantly the ground is usually fertile, and such ground should be made to produce some kind of crop. At this season millet or Hungarian grass should be sown on such land.

Education does more for a poor farmer than fertilizers. It grows better crops and breeds better stock. What many a poor farm, with its scrawny cattle and foul acres, wants is a heavy application of brains.

If you must, or think you must, feed corn to the horses during the winter, do let up on the practice in summer. Feeding a horse corn in summer is a good deal like building a fire in the parlor stove on the first of July.

There is never too much good butter on the market, but there is always a large supply of inferior butter. The prices are not regulated by the quantity so much as by the quality. Good butter sells at high prices at all seasons of the year.

"I wish you could be cured of that complaint," his wife said as he growled about the dinner again.

THE RAFTING PIN.

A rafting pin appears to be a very simple thing and of trifling importance, but is not so inconsequential after all, when the number used annually is taken into consideration, and the amount of hardwood timber consumed in their production is understood. The Tittabawassee and other boom companies in Michigan use millions of these little and simple devices, one pin being required to every log "tied out" by them; and the firms producing them use up whole "train loads" of logs in their manufacture. They are simply a wedge-shaped piece of wood with sufficient of the center of the wedge removed to admit the insertion of a small sized rope, so that when they are driven into the center of each log they cover the rope and hold it firm. When the logs thus fastened in strings reach their destination, a slight blow breaks the pin, loosens the rope, and permits the logs to be handled separately. It will thus be perceived that millions of the little devices are made and destroyed annually.—Timberman.

Feeding Swine.

In order to obtain the best results all around the pigs should be taught to eat as early in life as possible. In some cases this will be when they are about two weeks old. The time of teaching them to eat will vary. The size of the litter in some cases, and in others the amount of the milk given by the dam, will govern it. Teaching them to eat is best accomplished by placing a small trough out of reach of the dam and supplying it with warm, sweet, skimmed milk and soaked maize. When the pigs get fairly to eating be careful to increase the feed as gradually as the pig's power of assimilation increases.

Right here care should be exercised in feeding the dam. Avoid getting her "off her feed." There is nothing so well adapted to make young pigs grow as their dam's milk. While feeding the pigs liberally the sow should be fed all she will eat of the food best calculated to make her give large quantities of milk. Good shorts mixed with bran, or the shorts alone made into a slop and soaked between feeds, accompanied by a few ears of corn, make a good milk giving ration.

Called Her Bluff.

Chipper little Della Fox, the soubrette of the Hopper Opera company, prides herself, says the New York Star, on the fact that she never allows anything, no matter how embarrassing, to disconcert her. A few afternoons ago, however, the cool little lady had an experience in which, as she expresses it, "her bluff was called and she had to admit defeat." She was walking on Broadway with a friend when they chanced to pass a young man who carried a light overcoat on his arm. Miss Fox carried an umbrella in her hand, and as she passed the young man she accidentally caught his overcoat with the handle of her umbrella. She turned round at once, and looking the young man in the face said, holding out the umbrella: "You may have it if you want it." The young man was staggered for an instant, but he quickly controlled himself, and reaching out his hand said, "Thank you," with a polite bow, as he took the proffered umbrella and walked away with it. The next day a messenger-boy brought the umbrella to the theater with a note which said: "I always call a bluff, no matter how small a hand I hold." The note was unsigned, and Miss Fox does not yet know whom the young man was.

Too Late.

Just in the gray of morning the other day a policeman on Second avenue saw a man dodging around in a rather suspicious manner and he finally cornered him and demanded an explanation.

"I'm a grocer's collector," he explained.

"But what are you out so early for?"

"Family over there owes us $30, and I expect they will start for Long Branch this morning. I thought I'd be on hand with the bill."

"Well, you are considerably too late. They went out by the alley gate at 11 o'clock last night!"

Alas! Poor Yorick!

When the workmen were digging the well at the Central Park this morning for the overflow from the drinking fountain they uncovered the skull of a man. The skull was complete, with the hair and beard still adhering to the bones. It is many years since this place was used as a cemetery and the skull had probably been under the ground for half a century or over.

A Charge and Counter Charge.

John Magee was charged with having used insulting and abusive language towards Octave Bauvais, a neighbor, on Sunday. When this case was called Magee laid an information charging Bauvais with having struck his boy, Fred Magee. The Magistrate heard the stories of the father and son and of Bauvais, and he advised them to go home and to live quietly without quarrelling about their children. The parties seeming to be disposed to accept this view of the matter the cases were dismissed.

On his return, Mr. Welch moved to Rochester, where he entered the employ of the Silver Lake Ice Co. Last Wednesday he died. His remains were returned to Port Hope for burial, six of his fellow workmen accompanying the remains. THE CASE DISMISSED.

The Police Magistrate's Judgment in the False Pretence Case.

The Police Magistrate gave judgment this morning on the charge against E. J. Hartley for obtaining money under false pretences. The judgment was as follows:—

"The information herein charges Hartley with having on the—day of April, 1889, unlawfully, fraudulently and knowingly by false pretence obtained from Thomas Dunn the sum of $64.35 with interest, &c.

"The evidence of Mr. Dunn is that he rented a saloon on Hunter-st. from Hartley that he sold liquor there and that from time to time he gave Hartley small sums of money, from 25 cents to $2.00, taking on each occasion an I. O. U. for the money; and that, afterwards, in April, 1889, at his request, Hartley gave him a receipt for the sum of these I. O. U's in the words following:—

"PETERBOROUGH, April, '89.

"Rec'd. from T. Dunn the sum of eighty-four dollars thirty-five cents in I. O. U's, part payment on rent.

"E. J. HARTLEY."

"That Dunn also had an account against Hartley for liquor amounting to $36, that when Hartley got the small sums of money he said he brought the money to his mother. That at the sittings of the Division Court held on the 25th inst., Hartley had sworn that he had no authority, from his mother to receive the rent.

"On this evidence I hold that there is no evidence of any false pretense at the time the receipt for $64.35 was given, nor is there any evidence that on that day any money was obtained by Hartley. I hold further that there is not any evidence that Dunn parted with any money on the strength of his belief in any statement made by Hartley which has been proved to be untrue. I therefore dismiss the charge."

The counsel for Mr. Dunn says that the matter will not be allowed to drop, but will be carried further.

BIG FIRE AT MINDEN.

The Village Almost Destroyed by Fire—Narrow Escapes.

MINDEN, Ont., July 28.—More than half the village of Minden was completely wiped out of existence this morning. The following is a list of the sufferers:—Wm. Cardwell, hotel, loss $500, uninsured; A. B. H. Carl, general store, loss on stock $5,000, insured for $2,000; M. Brown, shoe shop, loss $650, insured for $400; A. Palmer, saddler shop, stock saved; B. Gainor, butcher shop, loss light, no insurance; E. Nolce, general store, loss on building $2,000, insured for $700, on stock $8,000, insured for $2,450; Dr. Curry, building, instruments and library, loss $1,200, insured for $4,000; F. R. Curry, drug and book store, total loss on stock $2,000, insured for $800; J. H. Delamere, Echo printing office, loss on building $500, insured for $200, engine, power press and plant, valued at $3,000, almost a total loss, no insurance; Mrs. Dickson of Cornwall, owned the large brick block which was totally destroyed, loss $4,000, insurance unknown; Mrs. McCracken, hotel, building totally destroyed, loss $1,200, insurance $600. The post and telegraph offices were also contained in one of the buildings burnt.

Several narrow escapes occurred during the progress of the fire. Had it not been that several persons who had been driven to the roof of Mrs. Dickinson's block had taken a rope with them they would have had either to jump or roast. A couple slid down and escaped with slightly lacerated hands, but the hands of the others became so badly lacerated after descending varying distances that they had to let go and drop to the ground. None sustained serious injury. Dr. Curry, one of the party, besides being severely shaken up, received an ugly scalp wound.

The Sewers.

A meeting of the special Committee on Sewers was held last night, and Mr. J. E. Belcher, C.E., was instructed to take the levels of the town and prepare the plans, his tender being the lowest. To-day Councillors Langford (chairman), Cahill and Davidson and Town Engineer Belcher went to Brockville to see the sewers in that town, which are now being constructed.

Prospects of a Large Industry.

Representatives of a large American manufacturing company were in town today and looked over the ground with a view to locating their Canadian branch here. They were shown around town and expressed themselves as being very favorably impressed. Afterwards they met the Mayor and Councillors and had a conference, and the result is that there are fair prospects of the industry locating here. The establishment would employ a large number of hands and the pay roll would amount to over $150,000 a year. There was no difference between the Council and the representatives as to terms. It will undoubtedly be a good thing for the town if the industry is established here.

Games for the Exhibition.

This morning Mr. Chas. Cameron, President, and Mr. George H. Noble, Vice-President of the St. Andrew's Society, left for Toronto and Hamilton for the purpose of conferring with the Highland and other Scotch societies in the cities with a view of securing their patronage and co-operation in a grand tournament of Scottish games and athletic sports, in connection with the Central Exhibition to be held here in September. Negotiations have been going on between the Executive Board of the Central Exhibition and the Executive Committee of the St. Andrew's Society for the purpose of arranging this additional attraction at our fall show, and should the deputation, which went west this morning, be successful in their mission, it is likely to take place. Such an attraction as this should prove an important factor in bringing to town a larger number of visitors than has ever yet been present at our Central Exhibition. It is the only tournament of the kind as yet announced at any of the Provincial shows, and our local St. Andrew's Society are doing their utmost to attract Provincial attention to it. Efforts will be made not only to bring out the best professional competitors in Canada, but also to send out a large excursion from the cities and towns along the different railway lines to attend our show.

CRICKET AT LAKEFIELD.

The Peterborough Club Wins a Game in the Village.

A team of the Peterborough cricket club went to Lakefield yesterday and played a match with the Lakefield club, in which the Peterborough wielders of the willow won. The Lakefield club was reinforced by visitors, Atwood, of Montreal, and Whitney and Brown, of Toronto, and they put a strong team in the field, but they were sadly out of practice and though all showed good form they could do little against the Peterborough bowling. In the first innings Sam Kay went to bat and received the first ball and carried his bat through until he also received the last ball of the innings. Attewell and Stratton bowled the first innings for Peterborough, and each got five wickets for ten runs. In the second innings Parker got three wickets for 28 runs, Goldsmith 2 wickets for 3 runs, Boucher 2 for 16, Burnham 2 for 14, and McGill 1 for 2 runs.

The treatment the visiting team received at the hands of the Lakefield team was all that could be wished for.

CHEESE BOARD.

Mr. Cook Makes Purchases at Different Prices.

A meeting of the Cheese Board was held at noon to-day, as no sales were made last Tuesday, the highest offered then being 7⅞ cents. The meeting was held in the new market building.

The PRESIDENT said that as this was their first meeting in the new hall he wished, on their behalf, to thank Mayor Stevenson for giving them such a comfortable place to meet in. He had no doubt that the bidding would be more lively in consequence of meeting in the new building.

Mayor STEVENSON accepted their thanks on behalf of the town and said the town was pleased to be able to give them a better place to do their business in. Peterborough was a good market town and they wished to provide facilities for the trade.

The business of the Board was then taken up. The bidding was on the cheese boarded last week, as follows:—

CHEESE MAKING.

Notes for Cheesemakers for the Month of August.

In a bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture Prof. J. W. Robertson, Dairy Commissioner, gives the following notes on cheesemaking in August:—

A cheese factory's reputation is largely determined by the quality of its August, September and October output. The beginning of August is a fit time for every cheese-maker who has had only partial success during the hot weather to redeem his reputation and that of his factory. A comparison of the prices realised for the summer cheese of Ontario with the figures reported from the United States market shows that Canadian cheese are in demand at higher rates than American cheese will sell for. That we have gained in reputation and in market favor with British importers and consumers is evident. That this advance and advantage are the result of the applied skill of less than half of our cheese-makers is well known to those who visit the factories and handle their products. To reach and to speedily help those who work in cheese factories without any ambition or aspiration for improvement is well-nigh impracticable.

However, we desire to make helpful information not only attainable but unavoidable to such.

In a short time there will be numerous cable orders from England, calling for "cool August cheese." That brief description implies a mild, rich flavor that may be preserved for the winter trade, a firm, solid body "full of meatiness," a fine outside finish, with clean, bright rinds, free from cracks, and bandages fresh-looking and not likely to appear mouldy.

To help the cheese-makers in manufacturing a class of goods that may be satisfactorily shipped on such orders, I call attention to some things, both outside and inside of the factories which need their immediate and special personal care.

Around the Premises.—Insufficient or inefficient drainage facilities, unless enlarged or remedied, will show their worst effects during the month. At the cost of only a few hours of labor and a few dollars of expense, the immediate vicinity of every factory can be kept free from the noxious odors that arise from stagnant slop pools. The frequency and foulness of these about the factories in some sections is not only a menace to the permanent prosperity of our cheese manufacturing industry, but a disgrace to the men in charge of the factories.

At factories from which whey is drawn back to the patrons' farms in waggons, the leaking and spilling near the whey tank too often leave its vicinity in an almost impassable condition. A few loads of gravel will abate the nuisance and leave the place fit for approach during the succeeding months when the roads become bad.

The shrinkage in the milk supply will leave a shortage in the whey tank. In order that the whey may have more feeding value, the tank should be thoroughly cleaned and washed at least once a week.

At factories where hogs are fed, provision should be made for supplying them with one feed a day of some green fodder, such as clover, oats and vetches, oats and peas, or cornstalks. Salt should be fed liberally during this month.

In the Making room.—This month seems the one when flies become most numerous and troublesome. Some afternoon after the cheese are in the hoops, it will be a good plan to close up the making-room windows and doors, and to burn a small quantity of sulphur for the purpose of fumigating the place. If a tablespoonful of alchol be mixed with the sulphur, it will burn more freely. Care must be taken to prevent the fumes from getting into the curing room. The tins of the milk vats and the insides of the sinks should also be washed afterwards before they are used. All vats, presses and utensils should get a thorough quarterly-cleaning up early this month. The use of a solution of borax on the hoops will help to prevent mouldiness on the sides of the cheese.

Every cheese-maker should persistently fight untidiness and filth in every form, and he ought to have a women's passion for cleanliness and a similar antagonism for dirt.

In the Curing-room.—There will be difficulty in curing the cheese made during July at a sufficiently low temperature. Ventilation of the room during the early mornings, as well as during the evenings and nights, will be of benefit. Floors should be sprinkled with cold water morning, noon and evening. While the cheese are being turned on the shelves there should be an abundant admission of light. August is the month when the "skippers" are apt to do damage. A plentiful shaking of fly powder in the room before it is shut up for the day will destroy the cheese flies.

Cheese boxes should not be stored in the curing-room. The odor from the elm wood penetrates the cheese and affects their flavor.

Patrons.—Since the milk is richer and less in quantity, there will be an increased temptation to "even up" by the addition of water, or to "even down" by the removal of cream. You will be doing the community moral service, as well as the cheese trade some good, by reminding the patrons that the Dominion Act on adulteration of milk is in force and will be enforced against all discovered delinquents.

Patrons are more likely during this month than at any other time to forget to provide salt for their cows, and to neglect to supply an abundance of pure cold water. Cool evenings are no excuse for the neglect of aeration. All milk should be thoroughly aired immediately after it is strained.

The making of cheese for exhibitions is usually undertaken during the first two weeks in this month. Send a circular to every patron, making mention of those matters that are referred to in this bulletin, and inviting their co-operation, in order to aid you in the manufacture of cheese fine enough for exhibition and prize taking. If some patrons pay no heed, and no improvement results, don't get discouraged. Keep right on insisting on a better state of things in their practice.

Making the Cheese.—When the evenings are cool and the milk needs ripening, don't fail to leave it in the vat until it reaches the proper state of maturity, before the rennet is added. Use enough rennet to coagulate mature milk to a state fit for cutting in forty minutes when set at 86° Fahr. Dilute the extract to the extent of one pailful of water for every vatful of milk, and then mix it thoroughly by vigorous, rapid stirring.

When you are troubled with gassy curds, allow a development of acid, such as will be indicated by threads from the hot iron test a quarter of an inch long, before the removal of the whey. It is a good plan to run most of the whey off at an earlier stage, and to leave only enough whey on the curd to permit a free stirring of it. After the whey is draw, air the curd thoroughly and make provision for keeping it warm. When a curd sink is used, if need be to retain the heat put the curd back into the vat, but let the temperature be kept above 94°. Frequent turning and aeration will facilitate the development of acid, providing the temperature is maintained. After the curd cutter has been used, the curd should be stirred and aired for fifteen or twenty minutes before the application of salt. From 2½ to 2¾ pounds of salt per thousand pounds of milk should be added to curds that are fairly well dried by the previous stirring. They should be put in the hoops within twenty minutes after the salt has been mixed in.

Presses should be applied very gradually. The cheese should be bandaged neatly when they are turned in the hoops within two hours after they are put in the presses. They should again be turned in the hoops some time in the following morning. Where practicable, cheese should be pressed for at least twenty hours.

Endeavor to get anyone who sends milk to your factory, or who is concerned in its management, to try to bring it to the very front in point of reputation for the excellent quality of its product. Work conscientiously for that end, then talk your factory up always and wherever you go, and get your patrons to do likewise. In short, think and work to make your factory and its product worthy of a higher reputation, especially for August cheese.

NOTES OF NOVELTIES.

A CHATTY CONDENSATION OF INTERESTING FASHION NOTES.

Little Paragraphs About the Latest Styles in Hats and Handkerchiefs, Belts and Trimmings, Gloves and Shoes, Fans and Flowers—House and Table Linen.

Scotch plaid ginghams are striking for house wear.

The extract of limes is delightful for perfuming the bath.

Brown lace hats are trimmed with yellow roses and poppies.

Shoulder capes are of silk netting, ending with a deep fringe.

Black tights are worn in place of hose under riding trousers.

Six-button lengths have come in style for Suede and glace kid.

Expensive and rare waist belts are of the highly polished lizard skin.

Black silk vandyke passementerie is novel with a mixture of gold braid.

Silk gloves with the double tips will be very fashionable this summer.

Lovely little butter-plates are of French china shaped like different leaves.

Flower parasols, handkerchief bags, and long-stemmed posies are carried by other bridesmaids.

Black and gold screens, cushions, and table-covers are in good style with furniture of any color.

Flower boas for bridesmaids are composed of rose petals, ostrich tips, and long-stemmed buds at the ends.

Jet trimmings are in vogue again, and are considered handsome only when of the finest beads and designs.

White cashmere gowns are trimmed with amethyst or stem-green velvet ribbon and mother-of-pearl buckles.

The fancy for gilt trimmings is not yet on the wane. The newest pieces are the short jackets for the front only.

Linen sheets have deep hemstitched, frilled, or scalloped edges, and the end that turns over has Swiss embroidery. The pillow-cases correspond.

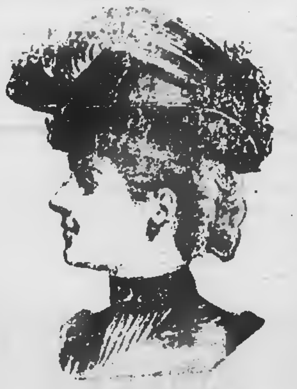
Hats for tailor gowns have straw brims and crinoline crowns, with the latter covered by a figured silk kerchief knotted on one side after covering the crown with it.

Some brides are making their bridal calls with two cards, one for the groom, joined by a bow of white silk cord knotted through holes pierced in the upper left corners.

The fashionable afternoon tea-cloths in fine linen have deep hemstitched borders, headed by a row of open "veinings," and borders of drawn-work in several beautiful designs.

For summer there are Madras muslin curtains, in cream and delicate pale terra-cotta, green and other shades, and Algerian ones, striped with color and flecked with tinsel.

Small collarettes of piece velvet, shaped to fit the neck, are beginning to appear, and one recently worn was fringed with pearls and headed with a single row of diamonds.



A PRETTY HAT.

This hat is a rather standard shape, turned up on the sides and faced with lace. Ribbon and lace trim the outside, with a spray at the back, long aigrette crossing the crown, and a large rose on the front of the brim, giving it an unique finish.

The very wide sashes, tied, are quite out of date, and only with crepe or tulle dresses dressmakers sometimes arrange light [illegible], which fall straight on the skirt with pleats or gathers.

Decorations composed almost entirely of its leaves are very popular, tied with color, and a very few blooms introduced. The fresh spring foliage, in great branches, adorns many a tall flower vase.

Professor Rucker's New "Divining Rod."

We have heard a good deal concerning the divining rod being used for finding underground supplies of water. The trick is a very ancient one, and lost nothing of its cleverness by being handed down for generations from father to son. The divining rod could find out where copper, tin, lead, zinc, or other metals lay buried below the surface of the earth, as well as discover water. The only thing that led to skepticism was that it professed to find too much. But, after all, the divining rod, made of a twig of hazel with a forked end, was perhaps the rude predecessor of the scientific instrument which Professor Rucker has just made known to the Royal Society; just as the rough Palæolithic flint instrument was the antecedent of the modern surgeon's lancet and the cavalry sword. Briefly, Professor Rucker's magnetometer is an adaptation of the well-known magnetic compass. It indicates the occurrence of subterranean strata lying beneath those which appear on the surface, if they are magnetic or contain much iron, as basaltic and many other igneous rocks do. Consequently, although this simple instrument cannot tell us if coal occurs deep down beneath, it cannot pronounce where it does not. In the important paper on "Coal in Southeastern England," read by Mr. William Whitaker before the Society of Arts on April 23, Mr. Whitaker had occasion to refer to Professor Rucker's recent discovery, and after the paper was read, Professor Rucker joined in the discussion. Professor Rucker and Professor Thorpe (of Leed) have for some time past been noting the behavior of the magnetic needle in various parts of Great Britain, and they found that it frequently misbehaves; in other words, it is deflected in certain places from what would be regarded as its proper direction. The explanation is that the deflection is due to great masses of iron-bearing rocks, such as basalt, even when they are buried up beneath chalk and tertiary strata. Thus the new instrument has been the means of demonstrating hitherto unsuspected relations between the magnetic properties and geological characters of various districts. Professors Rucker and Thorpe have in this way proved that there was magnetic attraction along certain definite lines which run across England. One is from the Lynn Wash to the line of the Midland Railway between Hawes and Settle (in Yorkshire), a distance of one hundred and fifty miles. They further stated, with confidence, that a line from somewhere near the south of the Thames, running through the South Wales coal fields, was a line to which the magnet was attracted, especially near Reading. Professor Rucker is of opinion that the needle is affected by the direct magnetic properties of the underlying rocks, and this can only happen where iron is present in considerable quantities. How delicately the magnetic needle stands in relation to the iron-bearing underground rocks beneath any surface is proved by the fact that considerable effects might be produced upon it by rocks lying six or seven thousand feet below. Where such iron-bearing rocks are indicated to come up nearest the surface, coal can hardly be expected to be found; and, further, in those localities where the underlying rocks come nearest the surface, the downward pull on the magnetic needle was found to be very great.—Scientific Gossip.

KNOW HOW —TO— KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs —there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders. They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

Ruric smiled at his boy's peculiar eagerness of expression, but he felt a degree of pride in his words, nevertheless.

It was thought the latter part of the afternoon that Ruric was somewhat startled by seeing some of the imperial guard approaching his house; and ere long afterwards his mother came to him pale and trembling, and informed him that he was wanted by the Emperor's officers.

"Oh!" she groaned, with clasped hands, and tearful eyes, "they will take you from me now!"

"Fear not, my mother," the youth confidently returned. "The Emperor will not blame me when he knows all the particulars. But come—let us go in."

Ruric found the officers—three of them—in the kitchen, and he asked them if they sought him.

"We seek Ruric Nevel, the gun-maker," replied the leader.

"I am the man, sir. May I know what is wanted?"

"Cannot you guess?"

"Why—yes. I suppose it must be on account of the duel which was fought this morning.

"Exactly."

"And who wants me?"

"Who should want you but the Emperor?"

"Oh, they will not take my noble boy from me!" cried Claudia, catching the officer by the arm. "Tell our good Emperor that Russia has taken my husband from me—that he fell in his country's cause. Tell him my boy was not to blame—"

"Hush, mother," interposed Ruric. "Fear not yet."

"Come," said the leader. "It is growing late, and Peter will not brook delay."

"But they will not harm him!" the mother frantically cried, clinging now to her son.

"No, no, my mother. Rest you easy here until I return." And then turning to the guard he added, "Lead on, and I will follow."

"Now rest you easy, my dear mother"; and with these words Ruric gently set her back into her chair, and then hastened out after the officers. In the entry he put on his bonnet and pelisse, and then followed his conductors out to the street, where stood a double sledge, with two horses attached.

"You seem to look upon the killing of a Russian nobleman as a very small affair," said one of the officers, after they had started on their way.

"Is he dead, then?" Ruric quickly asked.

"The doctors think his case a critical one. But that is not the thing; you would have killed him if you could."

"No, no. By heavens, 'tis not so! All who were present will swear that I tried to spare him."

"Very well," returned the officer. "We shall see about that when we come to the palace. Perhaps you may go clear; but, upon my soul, I would not willingly occupy your place."

Ruric cared not to argue the point with those who knew nothing about the circumstances, so he remained silent during the rest of the ride. It was near sundown when they reached the imperial palace, and Ruric was conducted at once into the Emperor's presence.

The Emperor Peter was in one of the smaller audience chambers, sitting at a large table covered with purple velvet heavily wrought with gold, and upon either hand stood some of his private attendants. He was a young man, not yet so old as Ruric by some three years, but his face already wore a mature look. His frame was solid, but not large—being rather slight than otherwise in physical bulk. His dress betrayed negligence and carelessness, and was in marked contrast with the rich garbs of his attendants. Such was Peter of Russia—yet a youth—small in frame, and careless of those graces which go to make up the sum of court life; but still able to bear the affairs of a great nation upon his shoulders. Within that head worked a mighty brain, and in that bosom beat a heart thirsting more for the good of Russia than for self or kindred.

Ruric saw Stephen Urzen and the surgeon there; and he also saw the Duke of Tula there. He met the Duke's eye, and a peculiar sensation of fear ran through his mind as he saw the stern, threatening expression that rested upon Olga's face.

"Sire," spoke the leader of those who had conducted the prisoner thither, "Ruric Nevel stands before you."

"Ah," uttered Peter, casting his eagle eye over the forms before him. "Nevel—advance."

With a bold, yet modest step, Ruric advanced to the table, and with a bow he awaited the Emperor's pleasure. There was a shudder perceptible in the frames of those who wished the prisoner well, for they well knew their mighty ruler's iron will and sternness of legal purpose.

CHAPTER VII.

In order to understand the circumstances under which Ruric was brought before the Emperor it will be necessary to go back a few hours. The autocrat had occasion to send for the surgeon, Kopani, who had attended at the duel, and as he was some time in answering the summons he was questioned, when he did come, concerning his tardiness. His answer was, that he had been attending the Count Damonoff.

"And what ails the Count?" asked the Emperor. "He was well yesterday."

"Yes—but he met with an accident today."

"Look, Kopani," the young ruler cried, who saw in an instant that something unusual had happened, "think not to conceal anything from me. What is it now?"

"Sire, I meant not to hide anything from you. The Count has been engaged in a duel."

"Ha!—was he challenged?"

"No, sire—he was the challenger."

"So, so. And who was the other party?"

"An humble gun-maker, sire, named Ruric Nevel."

"Nevel—Nevel—" soliloquized Peter. "The name is familiar."

"His father was a captain in the last war with the Turks. He arose from the ranks under Feodor, and was one of the bravest of the brave."

"Captain Nevel—Ah, yes. I remember now. He and Valdai were the two who first mounted the ramparts at Izlam. So the old dispatches read."

"Yes, sire. Poor Nevel was shot a month afterwards while leading his brave company against a whole squadron of Turkish infantry, while Valdai came home and got a colonel's commission."

"And afterwards received a title," added Peter.

"Yes, sire."

"And this gun-maker is this captain's son?"

"Yes, sire."

"And methinks Valdai left a child."

"He did, sire—a daughter, who is now with Olga—she is his ward."

"Yes, yes. And the Count fought a duel with young Nevel, and got beaten, eh?"

Before the surgeon could answer a page entered the chamber and announced that the Duke of Tula wished to see his imperial master.

The Emperor directed that he should be admitted; and ere long afterward the proud Duke entered the apartment. He was a tall, stout man, with light hair and blue eyes, and not far from five-and-forty years of age. His bearing was haughty, though he was forced to a show of respect now that he was before his master.

"Sire," spoke the Duke, after the usual salutations had passed, "I have come to demand justice at thy hands. My young friend, the Count Conrad Damonoff, has been most brutally murdered."

"Ha! Say ye so, Olga?"

"Yes, sire."

"But how was it?"

HUNTING THE CLAM PEARL.

How the Villagers of Albany, Wis., Spent Sunday.

ALBANY, Wis., July 28.—The pearl fishing craze has broken out afresh in this little village and 1000 men, women and children, many with large rakes, others using their hands and others diving into the channel of Sugar River, were out Sunday from daylight until midnight in their enthusiastic search for pearl-bearing clams.

The occasion of the excitement was the letting out of the water from the Albany milldam, by which 280 acres of overflowed lands were made accessible to the pearl fishers. The result of the day's work was many wagon-loads of clams, and perhaps $1000 worth of pearls, although it is very difficult to make an exact estimate as to their value, owing to the reticence of the fishers.

The water in the pond is still falling rapidly, and the hunt will continue for several days, until all or nearly all of the clams are taken away. To-morrow it is expected the number of pearlers will be largely increased. A picturesque scene was presented by the pearl fishers. All wore wide-brimmed hats and old clothing; many farmers drove in with their families from the surrounding country to enjoy the holiday and it required but a short visit to the underbrush to metamorphose the neat country lasses into veritable water nymphs, and they were soon up to their armpits in the mud and water digging clams with the rest.

As fast as secured the clams were taken to the shore and there opened, the finding of a particularly valuable gem being announced by a mighty shout of joy. So far as known no pearls were found having a value of more than $100. Many fables are told of big prices being obtained for these pearls in New York and elsewhere. They have really very little value and have been offered by the bushel to dealers. About one pearl in ten bushels might bring $10. A farmer, John Shafer, two miles from Albany, says he has refused $700 for a pure white pearl found on this farm. Some estimates place the value of pearls sold since the advent of the industry, a year ago, at $100,000 The pearl territory comprises about 30 miles surface.

THE LOTTERY BILL.

A Hard Fight Will Probably Have to Be Made to Pass It.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Although the vote on the substitute bill adopted by the House Postoffice Committee denying the further use of the mails to those engaged in the lottery business for the purpose of forwarding that business was unanimous, an effort was nevertheless made to amend the measure here and there, apparently in the interests of a less vigorous form of procedure against the offenders.

It was proposed, for instance, that the bill be amended so as to except newspapers furthering public lotteries from the operations of the bill. But in reply it was urged with convincing force that the portion of the press accepting such patronage was the agency next only to the mails themselves upon which the lottery companies relied for the successful carrying on of their business.

With the committee's endorsement of a bill, however, the fight has but just begun. The next move must be to secure a day for the consideration of the bill in the House. While a large majority of the House is at present in favor of the bill, the lottery companies are strongly intrenched here, and there is every reason to believe that through their paid agents they will attempt in some way to defeat the action proposed. After the successful purchase of a State Legislature no hesitation will probably be felt about attempting to corrupt Congress. But the situation here, fortunately for the country, is different from that at Baton Rouge, and however active the lottery agents and lobbyists may be their daily transactions can be noted and the proper warning sounded.

Chicago May Have Gas Fuel.

CHICAGO, July 28.—Chicago hopes soon to be emancipated from the abominable smoke nuisance. The City Council has taken up the fuel gas ordinance, so long delayed, and will probably pass it on Monday evening. The measure is backed by the Chicago Economic Fuel Gas Company. The company proposes to furnish fuel gas from Indiana, which will have to be piped about one hundred and fifty miles, and to supply local consumers at from 50 to 60 cents per thousand feet, with a rebate to the consumer for cash payment and 5 per cent. to the city of the company's earnings for the privilege of laying pipes in the alleys. Those in position to know all about the project laugh at the idea advanced by the opponents of the ordinance to the effect that it emanated with either the Standard Oil Company or the old Gas Trust. The laying of the pipes through Indiana is already under way. If the company is given its ordinance fuel gas will be delivered here before Jan. 1.

For hot weather the "Montserrat" Lime Fruit Juice, diluted and sweetened to the taste, is a delightful and healthful drink.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

Explosion of High Wines—The Dominion Rifle Association Meeting.

OTTAWA, July 28.—Fire took place in Bates' grocery wholesale store to-day. It occurred through the explosion of high wines. W. Bates, son of T. Bates of St. Catharines, one of the employes, was so badly burned in endeavoring to extinguish the flames that his life was despaired of. He was taken to the Protestant Hospital more dead than alive.

A young man named William Petrie was to-day committed for attempting to displace a switch in the Canadian Pacific Railway yards here.

The Dominion Rifle Association meeting in September will last four days this year, instead of a week, as formerly. The number, both of matches and competitors, will be as large as usual, but the saving in time will be effected by the use of additional target, and by having the marksmen shoot in threes instead of pairs as heretofore. The number of targets has been increased from 25 to 33.

A BRUSSELS BLAZE.

A Business Block Entirely Wiped Out—The Work of an Incendiary.

BRUSSELS, Ont., July 28.—About 1 o'clock Sunday morning a fire broke out in the Halliday block in Miss Montgomery's furniture store, which resulted in the complete destruction of the entire block. The buildings being composed of wood and the fire having gained great headway before any alarm was given, all hope of saving the block was abandoned, and the efforts of the firemen were directed successfully in confining the fire to its origin and in saving the adjoining buildings. The town fire engine, which did noble service, worked steadily, throwing two powerful streams for over three hours, when the fire was got under control, and but for its efficiency it is safe to predict that the adjoining buildings would have been destroyed.

The losses, so far as can at present be ascertained, are as follows: Miss Montgomery, furniture, partially destroyed, $500, insurance unknown; Thomas Ferguson, stoves and tinware, $1500, insured for $800; William Roddick, loss on building $800, insured for $350; John Halliday, loss on building $1500, insured for $1000; Misses Sample's loss on clothing and contents $500, no insurance. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

THE RETORT CUTTING.

A Tit-for-Tat Conversation Overheard in a Street Car.

Seated in a street car near two sweet young things, who were full of the beautiful ingenuousness of girlhood, the following portion of their conversation reached me, says a writer in the Boston Saturday Gazette.

"Oh, Amy, I have a frightful rip in my riding habit and forgot to have it mended. Lend me yours to-morrow, will you?"

"Yes, indeed, dear," (with emphasis and the utmost sweetness.) "But I'm awfully afraid you'll find it too tight. I wear a twenty-one corset, you know."

"Yes." (A slight but very impressive pause.) "I think, perhaps, I can get it together, though; I wear a nineteen."

It was clean-cut as the stroke of a razor; beautifully given and beautifully taken. Both faces preserved their calm and placid expression, a new topic of conversation was started instantly and I leaned back in my corner and marveled at my own sex.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

TERRIBLE COLLIERY EXPLOSION AT ST. ETIENNE.

One Hundred and Thirty-five Men Reported Killed—Mr. Chaplin's Charges Against United States Cattle—Cholera Epidemic in Mecca—Russia's Crops.

LONDON, July 29.—Mr. Chaplin, President of the Board of Agriculture, replying to questions in the House of Commons today, declined in the absence of authoritative proof to consider the United States free from pleuro-pneumonia. He said that within a short time animals suffering from the disease have arrived at Liverpool from New York.

Caprivi's African Memorandum.

BERLIN, July 29.—The Reichsanzeiger today published Chancellor Von Caprivi's memorandum of the Anglo-German agreement relative to territory in Africa. It begins by stating that the German Colonial policy coming in contact with English schemes caused disagreeable complications. As negotiations on single points did not avail to complete a settlement, it was decided to deal with the disputes from one standpoint. After giving seriatim the grounds for the concessions in Africa made by Germany to England the memorandum concludes by insisting upon the value of Heligoland, in view of the natural sentiment in regard to the island and of the island's military importance. When the island is occupied by Germany it will be difficult for an enemy to blockade the north-east coast of the empire, and its possession will give more power in the north and render it easier to defend the Baltic Canal.

Cholera Epidemic in Mecca.

LONDON, July 29.—Cholera is epidemic in Mecca. There have been 13 cases, seven of which were fatal.

120 Men Killed by an Explosion.

PARIS, July 29.—An explosion of fire damp occurred in the Pelissier pit at St. Etienne to-day. It is reported that 120 men were killed and 35 injured.

The Russian Cereal Harvest.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 29.—An official report states that the wheat harvest in the southwest provinces of Russia shows deterioration in quality. The prospects for summer and winter cereals in other districts are very good.

Four Hundred Rioters Arrested.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 29.—Four hundred of the Armenians who took part in the riotous demonstration against the Patriarch in the Armenian Cathedral Sunday have been arrested.

The condition of affairs in Armenia, the Turkish Province in Asia on the borders of the Black Sea, touching the Russian possessions, now resembles that in Bulgaria during the period of the atrocities. In Erzeroum, where recently a hundred Christians were slain in the church, a state of panic prevails, owing to the threatening attitude of the Mussulman population and the excesses of the troops. Hardly a day passes, says a correspondent, but wounded persons are brought in from the surrounding districts. In Erzeroum itself persons disappear and no one knows whither, and dead bodies are constantly found within and without the walls. During the riots a hundred persons disappeared, mostly women who were at the public baths, and are supposed to have been abducted by Mussulmans. The number of wounded is reported at 400, most of them having bayonet thrusts. The profanation of the Armenian Church at the time by the troops rankles in the minds of all the Christians. The Porte has threatened to proclaim martial law in Armenia. The general opinion is that if this is done Christian Armenians will be mercilessly crushed and their cause irretrievably lost. At the back of the Armenians stands Russia, as she did in Bulgaria in 1877.

The Patriarch of the Armenian Church, Monseigneur Nerces, who was mobbed, resides officially at Constantinople, and has the duty of devising measures for the protection of his people. He says that in six Asiatic vilayets—namely, Erzeroum, Van, Sivas, Karpout, Diarbekor and Aleppo—the Armenians number altogether 700,000.

MUTINOUS CATTLEMEN HELD.

The First Case of Its Kind Under the New Extradition Treaty.

NEW YORK, July 29.—The three men who are alleged to have been the ringleaders of the mutinous cattlemen on board the British steamship Chicago were arraigned before Commissioner Shields yesterday on the complaint of W. R. Hoare, acting British Consul-General at this port. The three men, who will bear the brunt for the evil deeds of the 27 cattlemen, are: Henry Allison, John McNamara and James Tynan. They all claim to be residents of New York. The police allege that they are members of the notorious Eleventh-street gang.

Counsel Hoare's complaint does not allege mutiny on the part of the men, as it is doubtful if they could be considered as bona fide members of the crew, although they signed ship's articles, but charges them with larceny in breaking into the ship's cargo and stealing bottles of beer. The value of the goods stolen is only placed at $1 in the complaint, but that is sufficient to extradite the men if proven. The case is especially interesting as it is the first that has arisen in this district under the new extradition treaty between the United States and Great Britain, which went into effect last July.

The examination was adjourned to this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

QUIET AT BUENOS AYRES

HOSTILITIES SAID TO BE ENDED FOR THE PRESENT.

A Complete Victory for the Government—How the Military Insurgents Are to Be Punished—The Citizen Revolutionists Fully Forgiven.

LONDON, July 29.—The Argentine Legation in London to-night received the following telegram from Buenos Ayres signed by the Finance Minister:

The Government is completely victorious. The mutineers have capitulated and will deposit their arms in the arsenal. All the rebellious superior officers will be dismissed and separated from the service. The troops will return to their quarters commanded by loyal officers. The forces mobilized by the Government are returning to the provinces. The political situation is thoroughly consolidated. The city and the whole country are quiet.

LONDON, July 29.—This despatch, dated Buenos Ayres, July 28, 2.30 p.m., has been received at the Legation of the Argentine Republic in this city:

Announce that the insurrection is completely subdued. The President of the Republic and the National Cabinet are giving orders from the National Government House. The Finance Minister is at liberty. JUAN GARCIA.

Senor Garcia, the signer of the above despatch, is the Argentine Minister of Finance. He was taken prisoner by the revolutionists at the beginning of the outbreak on Saturday.

A despatch to The Times, dated Buenos Ayres July 28, 2 p.m., says it is re-asserted that terms of a settlement between the Government and the revolutionary forces have been agreed upon. According to these the civilians who have taken part in the insurrection will not be punished. All captains of the revolutionary forces and all officers above the grade of captain will be deprived of their rank. The artillery of the insurrectionists will be surrendered tomorrow. This despatch is President Celman's version of the situation in Buenos Ayres.

Private despatches received here from that city, dated July 28, 9½ p.m., state there is no change in the situation and no chance for a compromise between the two factions. The matter, despatches say, must be fought out.

PARIS, July 29.—The Temps publishes a despatch from Buenos Ayres stating that the Government and the leader of the revolutionary movement have reached a settlement. President Celman, the despatch says, has resigned and been succeeded by Vice-President Pellegrini. Quiet has been restored.

LONDON, July 29.—It is officially announced that the English Government has received a telegram from Buenos Ayres saying the Government has triumphed and the war is over.

Negotiations Proceeding.

LONDON, July 29.—In the House of Commons to-day Sir James Ferguson said the British Minister at Buenos Ayres had sent a cable despatch to the Foreign Office stating that President Celman had left Buenos Ayres and the negotiations between the Government and the leaders of the revolution were proceeding.

RIO JANEIRO, July 29.—This despatch has been received here:

BUENOS AYRES, July 29.—Noon—The armistice has been prolonged pending negotiations between the Government and the foreign ministers who are endeavoring to bring about the restoration of peace. Efforts are being made to form a coalition ministry. The Congress has assembled.

The French cruiser Kerguelen has been ordered from Mozambique to Buenos Ayres.

The Latest from the Scene of War.

LONDON, July 30.—The Times has the following from Buenos Ayres:

12 m.—The squadron is firing at the Government house. Firing has recommenced in several parts of the city. The Celmanites are evacuating their positions.

2 p.m.—Celman, Roca and all the ministers have left the Government House. The presidential party has kept within the lines of the troops. Celman is deadly pale. Latterly every ship's shot save one has struck the Government House.

4 p.m.—Alem and Lopez have ordered the squadron to cease firing. They are getting their men away quietly as possible. The reason that the victorious Union Civica has practically yielded is because they have no cartridges left. They only had a hundred thousand instead of a million as they had calculated. The men wanted to attack with bayonets, but at the risk of their own lives the Civica Union refused to permit such bloodshed.

6 p.m.—A The Union Civica troops are quieter and more disposed to disarm.

Salvadorian Victories.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 29.—Geronimo Pou, agent of San Salvador, says in the eleven battles fought up to date the Salvadorians have come out victorious. The remainder of the Guatemalan army is fleeing in all directions towards the interior and not a single Guatemalan soldier is left on the frontier.

A revolution against Barillas has broken out in the eastern department. Several well-known generals head it and the downfall of the present Guatemalan Government is considered more than probable. Barillas is pleading for foreign intervention in his favor.

A Guatemalan Report.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 29.—A private telegram from Guatemala states that on Saturday the Salvadorians were defeated by the Guatemalans. The Guatemalan loss was very light. The Salvadorians lost 60 killed and 200 wounded, and a large number of prisoners.

A Fortune Under her Pillow.

CHICAGO, July 29.—When Mrs. Caroline Glaser, a septuagenarian, suddenly died at her home in Wells-street last night, the valise which was lying under the pillow on her bed was opened and within were found books and papers proving her to be the possessor of a fortune of $50,000, largely in 7, 8 and 10 per cent. mortgages.

There are no relatives in this city to mourn her death; indeed, only one of her kin is known to be living, a sister now in Neustadt or Haaydt, Bavaria. Mrs. Glaser lived alone and deprived herself of the ordinary necessities of life, so saving was she of her money.

Committed for Arson.

QUEBEC, July 29.—As a result of the fire marshal's investigation into the cause of the late fatal fire in St. Joseph-street Colonel Nobl to-day committed Delamare and his wife to stand their trial at the next term of the Queen's Bench on the charge of arson. The coroner's inquest on the body of their infant child will be resumed at the morgue to-morrow.

THE INTERNATIONAL GOSSIP.

Edmund Yates' Weekly Budget of News About His Royal Friends.

LONDON, July 29.—It is no secret that the Queen would gladly have dispensed with Emperor William's visit, which happens for many reasons to be peculiarly inconvenient. The Emperor is to arrive at Cowes next Monday afternoon and will dine with the Queen at Osborne, where there is to be a family dinner to welcome him. There is no fleet now at Spithead for him to inspect, but he is to spend a day at Portsmouth dockyard, and squadron regattas will occupy another day and probably he will visit the fortifications at the Needles. The Emperor is to leave Cowes on Friday morning for Wilhelmshaven unless he reverts to his original plan and goes to Edinburgh to see the Forth bridge, in which case he would embark at Leith on the Hohenzollern.

The Prince of Wales is going to Hungary toward the end of September to visit Count Festetics and Count Karolyi, and there will be a series of hunting parties on their respective estates. The Prince of Wales' yacht Alin, which is to take part in some of the squadron regattas next week, has undergone extensive refitting at Cowes during the last few weeks and has been fitted with new masts and a new deck.

A great deal of ill-natured nonsense has been talked about Lord Randolph Churchill's speech on Wednesday. Whenever he speaks, it is at once interpreted as a bid for office. This speech was discussed accordingly. No one knows better than Lord Randolph himself that his coming back into office now is not at all likely, and, what is more, he does not desire it. If he came back now it would be on conditions imposed on him by a cabinet not at all anxious to have him, and whose object would be to curtail his influence in every way possible. If he waits till election, he knows how powerful his aid must be to his party, and he would then be in a position to make better terms for himself.

Anticipation of speedy prorogation has been rather retarded by the work of last week. Things are going slowly and members are beginning to wonder whether they can get away before the middle of August. There can be no doubt that what is really wanted is thorough reform of parliamentary procedure. Eventually it will be found that Erskine May's proposition is the only feasible one, namely, to abolish the committee to examine the details of finance. At present every small vote is made a peg upon which to hang a speech, while practically the whole House is sitting in committee of supply. The present chairman is not half as strong in curbing debate as the speaker. The terrace of the House of Commons has become a favorite resort of the wives and daughters of the members and their friends. Every fine afternoon it is gay with tea parties, and ministers and members relieve the tedium of debates by pleasant talks and quiet flirtations on the terrace. One of the signs of the time is the large increase of lady visitors at the House.

The admiral of the fleet, Sir Thos. Symonds, has addressed a long and interesting letter on the subject of our naval deficiencies to Lord Salisbury which has been printed for private circulation. His main contention is that the fleet is dangerously weaker in comparison with those of other nations than it was at the time of the last great war, while the duties devolving upon it have enormously increased in the interval. The principal of these is the supply of coal to the ships, and entirely dependent upon this is the supply of food to the country. In 1815 the ships did not require coal and the country could feed itself.

FATAL RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

Miss Ina Mariatt of Oakville Killed at Burlington—Terrified by Toughs.

HAMILTON, July 29.—A span of horses attached to a wagon, in which were seated six ladies and the coachman, ran away at Burlington yesterday afternoon with most disastrous results. The ladies were: Mrs. Miller of Burlington, Miss Ina Mariatt of Oakville, Miss McKechnie of Dundas, Misses Ida, Lillie and Marion Waldie and the coachman, H. J. Chisholm. The spirited team belonged to Mr. John Waldie, and was purchased in Toronto last week. The party started to drive to Oakville and Miss Lillie Waldie handled the reins. Going down the sloping driveway from Mr. Waldie's residence the neckyoke broke and the startled horses dashed away. When the coachman seized the reins they broke. Then he jumped. Miss Mariatt also jumped, and was followed by the others shortly afterwards. In falling Miss Mariatt struck on the back of her head, and from her injuries died an hour and a half later. Miss Waldie's knee was hurt, and she was slightly cut about the face. Mrs. Miller was picked up insensible. The full extent of her injuries has not yet been determined, but she is suffering from internal hemorrhage and it is feared that she is badly hurt. The others escaped uninjured. Miss Mariatt was a beautiful and accomplished lady of 18, well-known in this city and a general favorite. She was the daughter of Stafford T. Mariatt, formerly of this city.

In the Police Court to-day Gorman, charged with hitting Constable Harris with a stone while the latter was driving the patrol wagon last Friday night, was committed for trial. James Whiteley, an old pensioner, was the principal witness against the accused. Whiteley admitted that he knew who threw the stone, but refused repeatedly to state who, it was as he believed his life would be in jeopardy if he disclosed his knowledge. The magistrate, after several warnings, committed the witness for contempt. After an hour in the cells Whiteley was brought into court and stated he saw the prisoner throw the stone.

John Mullen was convicted in the County Court to-day of stabbing ex-Reeve Jardine and was sentenced by Judge Muir to seven years in Kingston Penitentiary.

Four new liquor licenses were granted this morning, the lucky men being Charles Egner, J. P. Harvey, John Sullivan and David McKenzie.

The U. S. Tariff Bill.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—In pursuance of the understanding reached in the Republican senatorial caucus last night Senator Frye had a conference to-day with the members of the Finance Committee. It was agreed among them that on Friday, Aug 8, the river and harbor bill shall be taken up for consideration and pressed to a determination, the tariff bill to be laid aside until the river and harbor bill is disposed of.

Shipping Silver to England.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Over 1,500,000 ounces of silver bullion were shipped from this country to London last week, and this week nearly as much more has been ordered for shipment. Every summer, it is said, England demands a large amount of silver to pay India for wheat and cotton. This year the demand comes earlier, owing it is thought to the fact that after August 13 the United States Government will be buying increased quantities of silver under the new silver bill.

PROPOSED RETALIATION.

THE LATEST SCHEME OF THE WASHINGTON CABINET.

Great Britain to Be Forced to Yield in the Behring Sea Dispute by Putting the Screws to Canada—Cleveland's Proposition Revived.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Since the publication of the Behring Sea correspondence the Administration has been seriously considering whether terms cannot be made with Great Britain by prohibiting transportation of merchandise in bond from Canada into the United States and vice versa, thus stopping a very large and profitable trade, and at the same time greatly disarranging many lines of commerce. It is stated on excellent authority that the matter has already been twice considered by the Cabinet. It will be remembered that during the excitement attending the seizure of American vessels on the Atlantic coast by the Dominion's vessels in 1888, and after the Bayard-Chamberlain treaty had been rejected, President Cleveland sent a message to Congress in which he urged retaliation. The message created a profound sensation, and a bill was promptly introduced giving the President power to retaliate. It never, however, became law.

The retaliation proposed consisted in suspending by proclamation the operation of all laws permitting the transit of merchandise in bond across or over the territory of the United States to or from Canada. It is not likely that President Harrison would resort to retaliation of this kind without some such legislation as President Cleveland asked for. A bill of this kind would undoubtedly, however, encounter great opposition. The cutting off of Canadian transit in bond would work a great injury to all of New England and Portland, Me., the home of the speaker, would feel the blow most keenly. The West would suffer fully as much if not more than the East. Indeed it is from the West that the greatest opposition would come. The western farmers are interested in having their produce sent to the seaboard at the lowest rates, and this Canadian railroad competition is in their favor.

In this connection another matter has been suggested to the President and is now under consideration. By the treaty of 1817 neither the United States nor the British Government is allowed to maintain more than four small armed vessels on the great lakes, and no other vessels of war are to be built or armed there. The treaty can be abrogated at any time by giving six months notice on either side. It has been suggested to the President that now would be as good a time as any to give this notice, so that the United States might be in a position in the future to maintain a more formidable force on the lakes. There are members of Congress, however, who do not think the abrogation of the treaty would be advantageous to the United States, as England is much better able to send light draught torpedo and gun boats into the lakes than we are, while, if the naval force in the inland waters is restricted, it will make the conditions more equal.

Slaughter of the Seals.

VICTORIA, B.C., July 29.—The following particulars of the catches of Victoria's sealing fleet were received by the steam schooner Mischief, which arrived last night:

Minnie 762, Marvin 676, Sapphire 1278, Viva 486, C. H. Tupper 571, Juanita 316, Beatrice 710, Penelope 878, Sea Lion 817, W. L. Rich 561, Triumph 1018, Ocean Belle 946, Taylor 303, Black Diamond 345, Teresa 562, Ariel 340, Favorite 961, Annie C. Moore 708, W. P. Hayward 250, Pathfinder 580, Aurora 800, Kate 460, Mary Ellen 1571.

This makes a total of 15,747 skins. Another of the schooners will reach here in about four days. None of the schooners were molested or even sighted by any of the American revenue cutters. They had good hunting weather, and, judging by this half season's catch, the fall catch will be a very successful one. Immediately upon the arrival of the Mischief a courier was despatched to Esquimalt conveying the above intelligence to Admiral Hotham of Her Majesty's fleet.

RUN DOWN ON A BRIDGE.

The Terrible Death of Three Little Children at Paterson, N.J.

PATERSON, N.J., July 29.—Five children who had been blackberry picking started this evening to cross the Erie Railway bridge over the Passaic River. The bridge has no rail or foot path. A train approached the western track and they stepped on the eastern track in the way of a fast passenger train. The engine of the latter blew the whistle, but the children, paralyzed with fear, did not stir. The engineer did not apply the brakes for fear the train would go through the bridge. Persons on the river banks vainly shouted to the children, telling them to get between the tracks. In an instant the heavy locomotive struck the little ones and hurled three of them upon the other track dead. The engineer was almost fainting, but stuck to his post and stopped the train as soon as he crossed the trestle. Passengers got out to investigate and were sickened at the horrible sight which met their gaze. Jennie Brewster, aged 13, Nellie Warren, aged 10, and Mattie Warren, her sister, aged 8, were dead. Jane Warren, aged 13, was fearfully injured and their little brother Willie was hurled into the river 50 feet below, where he was found in the water hurt but alive. The two injured children were taken to the hospital. Both will recover. The grief of the children's parents was heart rending.

TORONTO TOPICS.

Obstructed the Police—Fined For Overcrowding a Steamer.

TORONTO, July 30.—Mrs. Isabella Clark was taken into custody for obstructing the police who had a warrant to search her house for liquor. The case was remanded yesterday morning till Friday.

In the Police Court yesterday Capt. Thomas Jackman, master of the steamer John Hanlan of the Island Ferry Company's fleet, was charged by Steamboat Inspector Harbottle with overloading his boat on June 21. The prosecution claimed that the boat carried 242 passengers, while her certificate allows only 172 passengers. The defendant was fined $50 and costs.

The strike of corset girls employed by the Telfer Manufacturing Company was brought to an end yesterday morning by the firm yielding to most of the demands made and the girls went back to work yesterday morning.

The hotelmen at their meeting yesterday decided to raise the price of whisky by the glass to 10 cents after Sept. 1.

BENSFORT BRIEFS.

The Sudden Death of Mrs. Irwin—Harvesting—New Buildings.

Correspondence of the Review.

THE CROPS.—Harvesting is now in full operation. Fall wheat and barley is a fair to average crop. Peas are good. The prospect for oats are not so good as usual. The apple crop is light.

NEW BUILDINGS.—Mr. Fletcher's new blacksmith and carriage shop, also stable and driving house on Lake-st, are fast approaching completion. The buildings are very commodious and will soon be ready for occupation. Mr. Fletcher has shown considerable enterprise in erecting first-class buildings. He intends to move his house on to the lot in the fall. When all is finished he will have premises a credit to himself and to the village of Bensfort.

SUDDEN DEATH.—We have to notice the very sudden death of Mrs. Thos. Irwin, which took place at the residence of Mr. David Morrison, sr., where she has been living for some time. Mrs. Irwin retired apparently in her usual health at ten o'clock on Monday night and died about eleven. The deceased was about 85 years of age and had always enjoyed good health up to her decease. She was an old resident of the township.

LAKEFIELD LOCALS.

Correspondence of the Review.

S. S. ANNIVERSARY AND EXCURSION.—The 27th anniversary of the Lakefield Methodist Sabbath School was held on Sabbath, July 20th, when good appropriate sermons were preached to large and appreciative audiences, by Rev. F. Johnson, pastor, in the morning, and by Rev S. J. Sherey, of Peterborough, in the evening. The Sunday school, numbering between 200 and 300, is in a prosperous condition, under the superintendence of Mr. J. C. Sherin, who is also in the 27th year of his office as Superintendent. The annual Sunday School excursion per Str. Cruiser and palace scow (Wave Crest of Peterborough) was held on Tuesday, July 22nd. A large number took advantage of the day and delightful trip to Juniper Island, Stoney Lake, where, after partaking of a sumptuous repast, a number took to huckle-berry picking, while others dotted the lake with their canoes brought for the occasion, while still others made good use of the Cruiser organ, making hills and valleys ring with delightful strains, both oral and instrumental, presenting on the whole a spectacle of great interest. With our party we had a number of campers, among whom were Revs. Messrs. Roberts, of Uxbridge, Cameron, of Whitevale, Anderson, of Campbellford, and others from Toronto and Peterborough, all of whom enjoyed the trip and beautiful scenery. Capt. Reynolds, proprietor of the Cruiser, was most unremitting in his kind attention to the comfort and convenience of the party, which, together with his genial, affable and gentlemanly conduct called forth a hearty vote of thanks from the crowd, moved by Rev. F. Johnson and seconded by Dr. Burgess and followed by three cheers for the captain that he may have a long and successful carier on these waters. After this we glided smoothingly into Lakefield wharf singing several selections and closing with "God Save the Queen." Thus ended one of the most delightful and successful excursions the school has ever had.

HIS MARRIAGE NOT VOID.

Kleptomania Is Not Sufficient Ground for a Divorce.

ST. PAUL, July 29.—Among the decisions handed down by the Supreme Court Judges this week was one of peculiar interest to husbands anxious to be divorced. It is in the case of John M. Lewis of St. Paul, who applied some time ago for a divorce from his wife, Ella R. Lewis, on the ground that she concealed from him at the time of their marriage in 1882 the fact that she was a kleptomaniac. The husband did not discover that she was so afflicted until 1888, when he sent his wife to an asylum in New York State. He then applied to the courts for a divorce, and neither in the lower courts nor in the Supreme Court did the defendant wife appear. The lower court denied the case, and the husband then took the application to the Supreme Court. Judge Vanderburgh in his opinion says:

> The plaintiff applies for a decree of nullity on the ground of his wife's insanity at the time of his marriage, of which he claims to have then had no knowledge. The particular form of insanity alleged was a morbid propensity on the part of the wife to steal, commonly denominated kleptomania. It was not proved, nor is it found by the court that she was not otherwise sane or that her mind was so affected by this peculiar propensity as to be incapable of understanding or assenting to the marriage contract.
> Whether the subjection of the will to some vice or uncontrollable impulse, appetite, passion or propensity be attributed to disease and be considered a species of insanity or not, yet as long as the understanding and reason remain so far unaffected and unclouded that the afflicted person is cognizant of the nature and obligation of a contract entered into by him or her with another the case is not one authorizing a decree avoiding the contract. Any other rule would open the door to great abuses. Anonymous 4 Pick., 32; St. George vs. Biddeford, 76 Me., 593; Durham v. Durham, 10 Pro. and Div. 80.

Other authorities are cited where contracts and wills have been upheld by the courts, though the party executing the same was found subject to some peculiar form of insanity or delusions.

The defendant is found to have been subject to kleptomania at the time of her marriage in 1882, but the plaintiff did not discover the fact until 1888. The plaintiff contends that such concealment constituted a case of fraud, and that the court should declare the contract of marriage void on that ground.

Flowers and fans would seem to be intimately associated, and a pretty novelty is a gauze fan with the ribs outlined to the top with heath of one tone—heliotrope, mazie, or pink—matching the bow of ribbons at the handles, and the color of the ribs.

A novelty is a beautiful pale lavender Suede evening glove, with French sewing up the back in black, for slight mourning. The most recherche shades for evening wear are French pearl, ficelle, and gray. For the daytime the tan shades still hold their own.

PRESIDENTIAL POETRY.

THE FAVORITE POEM OF PRESIDENT ABE LINCOLN.

Published in 1865—Shortly After Lincoln's Death—He Had Memorized It and Many Others—A Touching Side of the Famous Man.

Lincoln's favorite poem is here given. It was last published in Cincinnati in 1865. It is a lovely piece of language and a poem full of pure pathos.

Almost startling in their premonitory aptness are the first and the last verses. They are like unconscious prophecy. The author of the poem is said to be William Knox who died at thirty-six years of age, in 1825, at Edinburg, Scotland. The poem was communicated to the N. Y. Post by F. B. Carpenter, the artist who painted the picture of the Emancipation Proclamation. He says:—

I was with the President alone one evening in his room, during the time I was painting my large picture at the White House, last year. He presently threw aside his pen and papers, and began to talk to me of Shakespeare. He sent little "Tad," his son, to the library, to bring a copy of the plays, and then read to me several of his favorite passages, showing genuine appreciation of the great poet. Relapsing into a sadder strain, he laid the book aside, and leaning back in his chair said:

"There is a poem which has been a great favorite with me for years, which was first shown to me when a young man by a friend and which I afterward saw and cut from a newspaper and learned by heart. I would," he continued, "give a great deal to know who wrote it, but I never have been able to ascertain."

Then half closing his eyes he repeated to me the lines which I enclose to you. Greatly pleased and interested, I told him I would like, if ever an opportunity occurred to write them down from his lips. He said he would some time try to give them to me. A few days afterwards he asked me to accompany him to the temporary studio of Mr. Swayne, the sculptor, who was making a bust of him at the Treasury Department. While he was sitting for the bust I was suddenly reminded of the poem, and said to him that then would be a good time to dictate it to me. He complied, and sitting upon some books at his feet, as nearly as I could remember, I wrote the lines down, one by one from his lips.

After we had discussed for a brief time the merit of the poem referred to above, Mr Lincoln said: "There are some quaint, queer verses, written I think by Oliver Wendell Holmes, called 'The Last Leaf,' one of which is to me inexpressibly touching." He then repeated to me, also from memory, the poem. The verse he referred to occurs about the middle of the poem, and is this:

"The mossy marbles rest
On the lips which he has pressed
In their bloom,
And the names he loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb."

As he finished this verse, he said in his emphatic way: "For pure pathos, in my judgment, there is nothing finer than those six lines in the English language!"

Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud!
Like a swift, fleeting meteor, a fast-flying cloud,

A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
He passeth from life to his rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak and the willow shall fade,
Be scattered around and together be laid;
And the young and the old, and the low and the high
Shall moulder to dust, and together shall lie.

The infant a mother attended and loved;
The mother that infant's affection who proved;
The husband that mother and infant who blessed,
Each, all, are away to their dwellings of rest.

The maid on whose cheek, on whose brow, in whose eye
Shone beauty and pleasure—her triumphs are by;
And the memory of those who have loved her and praised,
Are alike from the minds of the living erased.

The hand of the king that the scepter hath borne;
The brow of the priest that the miter hath worn;
The eye of the sage, and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost in the depth of the grave.

The peasant, whose lot was to sow and to reap;
The herdsman, who climbed with his goats up the steep;
The beggar who wandered in search of his bread,
Have faded away like the grass that we tread.

So the multitude goes, like the flower, or weed,
That withers away to let others succeed;
So the multitude comes, even those we behold,
To repeat every tale that has often been told.

"The saint who enjoyed the communion of Heaven,
The sinner who dared to remain unforgiven,
The wise and the foolish, the guilty and just
Have quietly mingled their bones in the dust."

For we are the same our fathers have been:
We see the same sights our fathers have seen—
We drink the same stream, and view the same sun—
And run the same course our fathers have run.

The thoughts we are thinking our fathers would think,
From the death we are shrinking our fathers would shrink;
To the life we are clinging they also would cling,
But it speeds for us all, like the bird on the wing.

They loved, but the story we can not unfold.
They scorned, but the heart of the haughty is cold;
They grieved, but no wail from their slumber will come;
They joyed, but the tongue of their gladness is dumb.

They died, aye! they died; we things that are now,
Who walk on the turf that lies over their brow,
And make in their dwellings a transient abode,
Meet the things that they met on their pilgrimage road.

Yea! hope and despondency, pleasure and pain,
We mingle together in sunshine and rain;
And the smiles and the tear, the song and the dirge,
Still follow each other, like surge upon surge.

'Tis the wink of an eye, 'tis the draught of a breath;
From the blossom of health to the paleness of death,
From the gilded saloon to the bier and the shroud—
Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud!

The house of Charles Branch, at Sargents, Santa Clara County, Cal., was ruined by the recent earthquakes. When the first shock came Mrs. Branch caught the baby and rushed from the room. When the second shock came the cradle was crushed and buried under heavy blocks of adobe.

Olive Thorne Miller, the Brooklyn authoress, has a room set apart exclusively for her pet birds, about which she writes so entertainingly. In this indoor apartment she trains and watches them, and from her observation of their ways writes such books as "Birds' Ways," "In Nesting Time," etc.

It is an interesting fact that in Columbia, where potatoes form the chief food of the people, and where potato disease runs riot very often, the greater the altitude at which the vegetable is grown the less it is liable to disease, and at 9,000 feet above the sea it grows in a perfectly healthy state.

A Snake Story.

The first genuine snake story of the season has come from Stony lake. Mr. C. H. Clementi at Burleigh Falls this week saw a large puff or blow adder snake, and, as naturally followed owing to the enmity between the snake and man, he killed it. The snake was 3 feet ½ inch long and 3½ inches in circumference. This kind of snake is rarely seen, and although Mr. Clementi has been accustomed to going up these lakes for many years he only saw one before, and that was fifteen years ago. The puff adder is of a light brown color with a white belly, and on the head there is an octagonal plate formed of scales. When it is disturbed its neck swells, which gives it its name.

One of the number, and the gentleman who made the "find," is an old and experienced miner and lumberman, and a person who will push matters for all they are worth. By the way, mining is looking up on the north shore of Lake Superior and the Peterborough people who have invested in that locality are likely to reap a rich harvest, as much money is to be spent this year in cribbing and other public improvements.

A Narrow Escape.

There was a narrow escape from a sad calamity at Chemong Park yesterday. Three ladies, Mrs. Alex. Elliott and Mrs. John McKee, of town, and Mrs. Brignall, of Belleville, were bathing in Chemong Lake, when Mrs. Elliott and Mrs. Brignall got out into deep water and were unable to reach a footing. Mrs. Elliott had sunk twice beneath the waves when Mrs. McKee, who heroically rushed to the rescue, succeeded in reaching her and with Mrs. McKee's aid both ladies reached the shore in an exhausted condition. The beach runs out some distance into the lake and at a distance of two or three hundred feet there is a sharp decline. It was at this point that the ladies got beyond their depth. The water has been staked out to show how far bathers may venture in safety and the danger of accidents will thus be avoided.

Hamilton Band Competition.

The Peterborough band has entered in the competition at Hamilton, which takes place on Aug. 11th. The prizes offered are valuable and the rules are of a satisfactory kind, and as Hamilton has a reputation for doing things well and "on the square" the competition will be a great musical event. There are two classes of prizes given, the first-class including all bands with 25 pieces or over, and the second class including bands of under 25 pieces. The prizes in the second class, in which the Peterborough band will compete, as its membership is under 25, are five in number, $300, $200, $100, $60 and $40. This is the only opportunity the band has had of competing with bands of its own size, and the members are practicing steadily and feel confident of success. One of the features of the competition will be at the concert in the evening when all the bands, no doubt a large number, will join in playing one piece.

The New Telephone Company.

A meeting of the directors of the new Ontario Telephone Company was held yesterday afternoon in Messrs. Edmison & Dixon's office, the Chairman, Mr. James Kendry, presiding. It was decided to commence work at once in getting ready for business. Mr. D. O. Frye was appointed superintendent of construction, and a committee on construction was appointed to take immediate steps to purchase the poles and other things necessary for the plant and to supervise the work. An order was placed with the Federal Telephone Company of Montreal for 300 instruments and for a switch board with a capacity of three hundred. The authorized capital was placed at $50,000, in 2,000 shares of $25 each. Mr. R. M. Dennistoun, the company's solicitor, is preparing the necessary papers for incorporation, and they ask for incorporation for the purpose of constructing and operating a system of telephone exchange, electric fire and burglar alarms, electric bells, police patrol calls and other electric systems of a similar nature, with all the necessary powers to carry on such a business.

THE BARNARDO HOME WORK.

Dr. Barnardo's Account of the Work in England and Canada—An Appeal for Assistance to the Local Branch.

On Tuesday evening a large party of ladies and gentlemen assembled at the Home by invitation of Dr. Barnardo to hear from the founder of the institution a recital of the work already undertaken and accomplished. Guests began to arrive at 7 p.m. and were received by Dr. Barnardo, Miss Woodgate, the lady matron, Miss Code, the resident secretary, and ladies of the Home. Refreshments were served by the ladies in the large dining room.

Taking advantage of the beautiful evening chairs had been arranged on the lawn and when Mayor Jas. Stevenson took the chair at 8.30 o'clock the company were seated in comfort. Dr. Barnardo spoke from the open window on the west side of the Home. A hymn was sung "Rescue the Perishing" and a prayer offered by Rev. Mr. Bennet, after which Mayor Stevenson spoke for a few minutes.

He said he felt that Dr. Barnardo was doing a good work, despite many things he had to contend with. He had come in contact with Dr. Barnardo, and the work both here and in other places was deserving of a generous support. He was well pleased with the character of the children sent out from England and with the very able way the work was carried on. The expenses of the work were sustained by friends of the movement in England and a very small share of it had been borne by our townspeople. Personally, he was aware that very many excellent servants in town were Barnardo girls, and as a rule the children brought to Canada were bright and intelligent and had been trained properly. It was true that cases had came under his notice of dissatisfaction on the part of those who had taken children from the Home, but then it was to be remembered that many people were unable to control and manage their own children let alone the children of strangers. The percentage of cases of failure to give satisfaction was very small indeed. It was a noble work on the part of Dr. Barnardo to rescue and lift up these children, and the work deserved assistance. He felt sure that such would be given and he need scarcely say, be appreciated. Dr. Barnardo would give particulars of the work and its needs and prospects.

DR. BARNARDO said he wished to tell something about the work committed to his care. In giving some details of the character of the work he said some confusion had arisen in regard to the English and Canadian work. The principle of the work in England was that no child wholly destitute was refused assistance, no matter who. This was the English side and viewed from a Canadian point of view it created the error that all classes of children were taken in and indiscriminately shipped out to Canada without regard to their physical or moral condition. There was a great deal of destitution in England, and a large number of the children taken in care were simply the children who had lost their parents and become destitute. In a sense they were not taken off the streets, not children of the vicious poor, but children of the unfortunate poor. They were taken before they had the opportunity to become degraded and placed where brighter and better influences would help to a better condition. The work in England had been marked by special exertions. The children were sought out from homes where drink had reigned and children had suffered cruelty. In London over 10,000 children were living a street life,surrounded by bad influences. The English work was marked by the special principle that no child however destitute will be turned away. The Canadian principle required that all children sent out should be of good physical frame, good character, industrious, as far as found practicable, and in every way the flower of the flock. Searching enquiry was always made into past habits and associations in order to find out the fitness of the children for emigration. They were trained and directed as fully as possible. When a girl or boy was placed out in Canada, the principle was laid down that they must never be lost sight of. Enquiry was made as to the home in which the child would be received and the daily life from week to week. It was, as far as possible, found out if the conditions of life were such as would conduce to the child's happy future. This required constant attention and entailed great anxiety. The Barnardo Home in Canada was always a refuge for the child who was not happy, who was in temptation, or who was not being fairly treated. Very often children did not suit a certain mistress and had to be changed. So far as was known of the whole number of children sent out (4,000) only two had become a public expense to the community. It was true that a certain number of children failed. Very true, but the average of these children was fully as high as that of the children in general of the community. Any cases of pronounced failure, who prove hopeless, are returned to England. Of such cases only three have ever occurred, very few, among the thousands which have been received and placed in Canadian homes. To sustain the work in Canada requires an annual outlay of over $20,000. To sustain the Peterborough branch required, for last year, about $11,000. In all since 1882, over $200,000 had been spent in Canada, all English money sent out here. It was not disputed that their efforts were giving these children a happier and brighter future. Now, the people of Peterborough had been very kind before, and here was an opportunity. The roof of the building required some serious repairs—would not in fact last another winter. About $850 would make the required repairs. Some other necessary requirements would entail expense, but was very much needed. He felt that $1500 would put the Peterborough Home in very nice condition and the work could go on satisfactorily as before. He suggested that the Town Council could do something and it would be a recognition of the Home's usefulness and efficiency and of the good work. Dr. Barnardo then referred to the Toronto branch and to the North West Branch Farm Home and said they were getting on very successfully. Some changes had taken place in the management of the Peterborough Home. They had lost the service of their good friend Capt. Annesley with Mrs. Annesley and their daughter. He was sure that Capt. Annesley had been most zealous for the success of the work and had sought in the most courteous way to encourage kind and neighbourly relations with all. In returning to England Capt. Annesley had left many warm friends in Peterborough who would be pleased to hear of his continued prosperity. Miss Sanderson, who had been very efficient, had ceased to be Secretary and it was a part of the evening's programme to introduce to the company the lady matron, Miss Woodgate, who would have charge of the Home, and the resident Secretary, Miss Code. He extended an invitation to all to come and visit the Home at all times and take an interest in the work.

MR. D. W. DUMBLE, at Dr. Barnardo's request, said a few words, expressing his sympathy with the work and principles under which it was carried on. He hoped no one would begrudge to the destitute children of England a home held out to them by the noble work instituted by Dr. Barnardo. If the Home had not been liberally supported it was because we were not in the habit of doing so, as fortunately there was a living for all in Canada. He hoped that Dr. Barnardo's appeal would be met with a hearty response, and that the new roof would be put on the home before the autumn closed. He suggested as one way of raising a portion of the necessary funds would be to make a direct appeal to the congregations from the pulpits of the town.

DR. BARNARDO, in conclusion, said he had seen some very encouraging fruits of the work. Fine young men and women who had grown up from boys and girls came to see him from all parts of the country.

REV. J. C. DAVIDSON in a few words warmly endorsed the remarks made by Dr. Barnardo, and said he was in full sympathy with the work and hoped much prosperity was in store for it.

MR. J. R. STRATTON briefly commended the work and felt satisfied that every possible means was used to ensure that the children sent to Canada were in all respects the flowers of the flock. He felt that the Council should meet Dr. Barnardo's wishes in regard to the improvements required.

REV. MR. LOCKE pleasantly spoke of the work and the happy auspices under which it was carried on. He wished the work success, having learned much of the good of the movement during the last few years.

After a vote of thanks to Mayor Stevenson, moved by Dr. Barnardo, seconded by Dr. Fife, the meeting dispersed, receiving the suggestion from Dr. Barnardo that those who desired to contribute assistance to the work of the proposed repairs should send to Miss Code, the secretary, by Saturday next, a note intimating the amount they were willing to devote for that purpose.

Where do They all Come From?

This morning Chief Rossel was interviewed by the advance agent of another company with preforming bears, the third that has been along within a few days. This "agent," who was dressed in blue jean with a red cap, said his company with two bears were three miles out of town and wished to know if they could come into town and give exhibitions. The chief replied with an emphatic negative.

Mr. Geo. Pearce, of the Diamond Oil Co., a gentleman who formerly resided here, is in town renewing old acquaintances.

Mr. T. B. Braden, brother of Mr. John Braden, who formerly taught school here, was the head centre of the great Barbecue at the turning of the first sod of the Calgary and Edmonton, N. W. T., railway. Another conspicuous figure on the same occasion was Mr. H. G. Taylor, well known here in connection with our first railway.

Mr. Thos. Zeland, of Chicago, is in town to-day and will go up the lakes to-morrow with Mr. T. Bradburn.

A Horse Trader in Trouble.

Two "gypsies" who were camped south of the town raised a row at the Kenneally House at noon to-day, where they were trying to make a horse trade with John Gorman. Michael Licett tried to quiet them and was also struck. The gypsies went to the police station, but when Chief Rossel inquired into the affair he arrested Jas. H. McFadden, one of the gypsies. A session of the Police Court was held and the Magistrate fined McFadden $5 for assulting Gorman and $5 more for assulting Licett. He paid the fines and regained his liberty.

THE MUSICAL TEXT BOOK.

An Earnest and Forcible Protest Against Unpatriotic Songs.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—As I believe our school system is the best in the world (barring the political head). I have ever cheerfully paid the very considerable taxes every citizen has to pay towards its maintenance; I have also paid, though not so cheerfully, for all the numerous text books so often changed, which the authorities require the youth to study and the parent to pay for. We are constantly enlarging the course of study—may be overdoing it,—but at all events one addition I heartily approve of, namely, musical instruction. When a person of middle age, who received his education in the old common and Grammar schools, peruses the text books now provided for his children, and which are so great an improvement on the indifferent text books of old times, he is struck with wonder and is puzzled to think how he could have acquired any knowledge at all. Take the geography now used and what a contrast it is, Mr. Editor, with the text book you and I had to study. Morse's was what we had, and the impression left upon our minds after the study was that the United States composed the greatest part of the known world and that Canada was nowhere and nothing, because that was what Mr. Morse, as a good Yankee, believed and consequently taught. Now, thank God! our children have proper and creditable works placed in their hands and they will acquire a proper knowledge of the extent and resources of their own country and will not be taught to feel as if we had no place upon the footstool. I hoped that all our text books were now revised and Canadian and British in tone, and that an effort was being made to develop a love of country and a feeling that we have a future before us as well as a historic past, and that it is a grand thing to be part and parcel of the British Empire. What was my surprise, then, to find that in so far as the musical education is concerned, our School Board have thought fit to adopt a different policy, and that our children are to be taught to chant the praises of our southern neighbor. Upon looking over the books my children are using in the Public schools of the town, I find one called "Progressive Music Lessons," a course of instruction prepared for the use of Public schools, by George B. Loomis. It may be what it professes to be for all I know, a first class text book, but I would rather my children were dumb, than they should have to sing some of the selections. It has been truly said, "I do not care who makes the laws, let me make the songs of the nation," as those songs which fire the heart of a people, will lead them in spite of all laws and law givers. In the text book I find the following songs:—"America," "America for Freedom," "Hail Columbia," "Hail Happy Day" (4th July), "Song of the Union," "The Red, White and Blue," "The Star Spangled Banner." These are all distinctly American national songs, and no doubt if we were Yankees we would believe all the statements therein expressed. America for freedom! Is it true, as the songs say:

"The word with which they started,
The globe has circled round.
Across its seas and deserts
The wild man knows its sound—
And something of the story
That lifts our hearts to-day,
How one heroic handful barred
The old wrong from its way."

What does the wild man of the United States know of freedom, of national fair play or of political honesty? The sound the red man has often heard has been the sound of oppression, ill-treatment and bad faith. America for freedom, indeed! The country of injustice to the negro, mongolian exclusion, alien labor laws and prohibitory tariffs! I dare say you are surprised that I should class our glorious old song, "The Red, White and Blue," as an American song. When I looked at the index and saw the title, I was disposed to overlook those others I have mentioned, as this one would serve as an antidote to their poison. I said, here at all events my child will learn that "Britannia is the pride of the ocean, the home of the brave and the free." I hummed the old tune and turned to the page to read the well-known words, when, horrible to relate, I found that Britannia was not the pride of the ocean, that its glory had departed and its place knew it no more. Listen to the song my child is asked to learn:—

"Columbia the pride of the ocean,
The home of the brave and the free,
The shrine of each patriot's devotion,
A world offers homage to thee;
Thy mandates make heroes assemble
When liberty's form stands in view,
Thy banners make Tyranny tremble
When borne by the Red, White and Blue."

Columbia, the pride of the ocean forsooth! This nation of fish pirates! Their navy makes tyranny tremble! When? On Behring's Sea, where they are trying to set up unlawful and unjust claims to the whole Pacific Ocean? The tyrant Salisbury is not just at present trembling, but I rather think Jim Blaine is. Not satisfied with stealing England's fish and England's rights, they must also steal England's songs. Is this the sort of literature to place in the hands of the children of this country? It may be said that we have no suitable book of instruction published in this country. If that is so, and the country cannot produce one, STOP teaching singing. I do not know who is responsible for the introduction of this book. I suppose it must be authorized by some one. If the trustees, they should have all text books examined by a committee before they authorize them. If the Minister of Education, let us have another minister forthwith. At all events I hope this matter will be looked into and made right.

Yours,
PATER.

KNOW HOW
—TO—
KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"Thus it was, sire: On the day before yesterday, I sent the Count with a message to one Ruric Nevel, who is a gun-maker in Sloboda. He went as I wished, and while there, the gun-maker who is a huge fellow, provoked a quarrel, and knocked the nobleman down. Of course the Count was offended, and as the ruffian threatened to repeat the offence, and as he furthermore grossly insulted a noble lady whom the Count held most dear, he could hardly help challenging him. The fellow accepted the challenge, and has succeeded, by the most cowardly maneuvering, in inflicting upon him a mortal wound.

"This is a serious affair," said the Emperor, who had not failed to note the astonished look of the surgeon while the Duke was telling his story.

"It is most serious, sire; and surely the ruffian should be at once executed."

"But did you not say that the Count challenged him?"

"I did, sire; but you must remember that it was an instinct of self-preservation with the noble Count. The fellow would have undoubtedly murdered him had he not taken this course."

"Were you present at the duel, my lord?"

"No, sire; but I have a friend without who was present."

"Then you may bring him in."

The Duke departed, and when he returned Stephen Urzen bore him company.

"This is the man, sire," Olga said, as he led his companion forward.

The Emperor gazed upon Urzen a few moments in silence, and then he said:

"You were present at this duel, were you not, sir?"

"I was, sire," the man answered, bowing low.

"And he was at their first meeting also, sire," interposed the Duke.

"Ah—yes. Then you know all about the affair?"

"Yes, sire," answered Urzen.

"Then tell me about it."

"First, sire," commenced the man, casting a sort of assuring glance at the Duke, "the Count went to the gun-maker's shop to get him to—to—"

"Let me explain here, sire," interrupted the Duke, as his puppet hesitated. "This man may not know properly about that mission. Living with me is a young girl—a ward of mine—a gentle, timid being, who has been somewhat a comfort to me in my loneliness. In childhood she was acquainted with this Ruric Nevel, and now the fellow has presumed thereupon several times to insult her of late with his disgusting familiarity. She dared not remonstrate with him for fear of violence, so she referred the matter to me. The Count has been anxious to win her for a wife, so I thought him not an improper person to send on the delicate mission. Accordingly I wrote a sort of promise—in the way of a voluntary assurance—pledging the signer not to make himself familiar with the lady any more. And at the same time he received the assurance that his presence was very disagreeable to the person mentioned. This I supposed he would sign at once; and as the Count aspired to her hand I deemed it no more than right that he should render her this service. Now, sire, this gentleman may continue."

Thus bidden Urzen resumed:

"The noble count was desirous, sire, that I should accompany him, and I did so. Upon reaching the man's shop we found him at work upon a gun-lock, I think. He received the note, but refused to sign it. The count urged him to sign, in mild, persuasive language until the fellow became insolent. Then he used some stronger terms, and I think he made some threat of what he would do if his insults to the lady were repeated; and thereupon the gun-maker struck him a furious blow on the face and knocked him down. I cannot remember all the threatening language which the fellow used, but it was fearful."

"And how about the duel?" asked the Emperor.

In answer to this Urzen went on and related what he had prepared on the subject; and it need only be said that the report was about on a par with what we have already heard. He even went so far as to swear that the count had tried repeatedly to compromise matters after the conflict had begun—that he begged of Nevel to give up the battle; but that the latter, thirsting for the young nobleman's blood, kept hotly, madly at it!

It was at this juncture, and without referring to the surgeon, that the Emperor sent for Ruric; and having learned that a lieutenant of the Khitagord guard was present at the duel, he sent for him also. Orsa arrived first, and was present when Ruric came.

And now Ruric Nevel stood before the Emperor. Peter gazed upon him for some moments, and then he said:

"Sir, thy bearing is bold."

"Why should it not be, sire, when I stand before one whom I honor and respect and do not fear?" So spoke Ruric calmly, and with peculiar dignity.

"Not fear?" repeated the autocrat, sternly.

"No, sire. Peter of Russia is not a man to be feared by those who love and honor him."

"Insolence!" uttered the duke.

The Emperor looked up into his face, and he added:

"Now, sire, you can see for yourself some of his traits of character."

"Aye," returned Peter, "I see. They are wonderful. I knew not that among my artisans there were men of such boldness."

The duke knew not how to interpret this, and he moved back a pace.

"Now, sir," returned Peter, turning to the gunmaker, "how dared you strike a Russian nobleman?"

"I did not, sire. Conrad Damonoff came to my shop, and he brought me a paper, in which I was required, or ordered, to relinquish all claims to the hand of—"

"Sire," interposed the duke, "he misstates—"

"Never mind," broke in the Emperor, with an authoritative wave of the hand, "we will hear nothing of the lady here. Why did you strike the count?"

"Because, sire, he descended from his station and struck me. He threw away the shield, which should protect the nobleman, and struck me without provocation."

"And then you knocked him down?"

"I did, sire."

"And perhaps you would have done the same to me."

"Sire," answered the youth, quickly. "When Damonoff tried by threats to make me sign his paper I told him that there was but one man on earth at whose order I would do that thing. The man who has the right to command shall never have occasion to strike me."

There was something in this reply, and more in the tone and bearing of him who spoke it, that made the duke tremble. He saw plainly that the Emperor's eyes sparkled with admiration as they rested upon the gun-maker.

"But now about this duel," resumed the Emperor, "How dared you take advantage of the count in the conflict?"

"Advantage, sire," repeated the youth in surprise.

"Aye. Did he not, Stephen Urzen?"

"He did, sire," replied the man thus addressed.

"And which of the two do you call the best swordsman?" Peter asked.

"Why, sire—the count is or was, vastly his superior."

LADY DUNLO'S STORY.

Her Defence in Court in the Celebrated Divorce Case.

LONDON, July 29.—Mr. Gill, counsel for Wertheimer, the co-respondent in Viscount Dunlo's divorce case, delivered a vigorous address to the jury yesterday afternoon after describing how Lady Dunlo had been hunted by detectives.

He said that when Lady Dunlo tearfully begged her husband to take her abroad with him and he replied that he had no means, she offered to work for them both. Mr. Gill said he did not want to shock this noble family, but he would surely be permitted to suggest that this impecunious scion of nobility might have obtained some employment.

Lady Dunlo at this point entered the witness box. She looked pale and exhausted, but bore the ordeal of a long and searching examination splendidly. She detailed the history of her liaison with Weston, the American, the father of her child, and solemnly declared that she had never been Wertheimer's mistress. After her marriage she begged Lord Dunlo to take her to Australia, as he had promised, but he said if he went alone his father would allow him upon his return to live with her. If he remained in England his father would have nothing to do with him. Dunlo left immediately.

Shortly after Wertheimer returned from America she said she went to live with him in his house, but he never slept in the house during the time she was living in it. She asserted that the detective's story about their struggle near a window was untrue. She told Wertheimer not to enter the house alone, as she was being watched. Wertheimer never kissed her after her marriage, but did once before it, and that was on his departure for America. A young fellow sitting in the rear of the court room snickered at this admission and was summarily ejected, Justice Hannen remarking with an angry look that he would not allow any expression of levity among the spectators. These were mostly girls and women and they became quieter after this reprimand.

Lady Dunlo said she had never loved Wertheimer, who, she claimed, adored her. Sir Charles Russell failed to elicit any remarkable admissions in the cross-examination. The fair witness denied that while Weston was in jail she rapidly grew more intimate with Wertheimer. She related how they went to Trouville and Paris together. She did not give her name at the former place, where they had their meals together. She said that they did not occupy the same room, but admitted that their apartments communicated. The maid, she added, used to leave the connecting door open, and she often locked it. On returning to London she continued to accompany Wertheimer from place to place, but did not live under the same roof with him. This ended the examination for the day.

Lady Dunlo and her sister Flo, upon leaving the court room, were followed through the streets by a crowd, but there was no display of sentiment. One of the documents handed to the judge, but which was not read, was from Lord Albert Osborne, who took that method of denying on oath the testimony of Marmaduke Wood that he was one of three who tossed a penny to see who should marry Belle Bilton, now Lady Dunlo.

THE BRUSSELS BLAZE.

Strong Suspicions of Incendiarism—An Investigation Probable.

BRUSSELS, July 29.—The conflagration in Brussels, particulars of which were given in yesterday's despatches, is still further suspected to be the work of an incendiary, as some person was seen running up Mill-street, which diverges from the scene of the fire, shortly before it occurred. It was the intention of Postmaster Farrow to move his office into this block, which was an unpopular proceeding, and it is surmised that this had something to do with the fire. The destruction of the block has been long anticipated, as it was the worst old rookery on the principal street of the village. An investigation is anticipated before the insurances are paid.

Losses Caused by Flames.

HAMILTON, July 29.—Fire at 10½ last night in a frame factory in Cannon-street, owned by the Wilson Manufacturing Co. and occupied by Thomas Mealey as a manufactory for felt, did $3000 damage.

MONTREAL, July 29.—The loss by the fire in the Balmoral Hotel this morning is about $30,000. These are the insurances: On furniture—Western $10,500, Lancashire $5500, Citizens $5000, Phœnix $5000, National $5000, Queen's $3500; total $35,500. On the building—North British $15,000, Guardian $15,000, Commercial Union $10,000, Royal Canadian $10,000 Royal of England $10,000, Caledonian $6000, Scottish Union $5000, Ætna $5000, London and Lancashire $5000, Connecticut $5000, Fire Association $5000, Norwich Union $5000; Total $96,000. Henry Hamilton, president of the Balmoral company, says a meeting of the board will be called at once. He thought that as soon as repairs could be made the hotel would re-open.

SCRATCHED 28 YEARS.

If I had known of the CUTICURA REMEDIES twenty-eight years ago, it would have saved me $200.00 and an immense amount of suffering. My disease (psoriasis) commenced on my head in a spot no larger than a cent. It spread rapidly all over my body, and got under my nails. The scales would drop off of me all the time, and my suffering was endless, and without relief. One thousand dollars would not tempt me to have this disease over again. I am a poor man, but feel rich to be relieved of what some of the doctors said was leprosy, some ringworm, psoriasis, etc. I cannot praise the CUTICURA REMEDIES too much. They have made my skin as clear and free from scales as a baby's. All I used of them was $5 worth. If you had been here and said you would have cured me for $200.00, you would have had the money. I looked like the picture (No. 2, page 47) in your book, "How to Cure Skin Diseases," but now I am as clear as any person ever was. Through force of habit I rub my hands over my arms and legs to scratch once in a while, but to no purpose. I am all well. I scratched twenty-eight years, and it got to be a kind of second nature to me. I thank you a thousand times.

Lies go by telegraph; the truth comes by mail three hours late.

It was very slippery walking when, according to his own account, a native of the Emerald Isle fell down four times before he could get up once.

"You don't mean to say that you understand French, Tommy?" "Oh, yes, I do. When ma and pa speak French at tea, I know I'm to have a powder."

"Pot luck," my son, is when you hold nine elevated and boost it up on the other fellow with a monarchic trio, and the other fellow neglects to materialize.

Bridget—"Enjoy slape, is it! How could I, I'd like yes to tell me; the minit I lay down I'm asleep, an' the minit I'm awake I have to get up. Where's the time for enjoyin' it to come in?"

"Is your vessel your home?" asked a lady addressing a man-of-war's-man. "It is, ma'am," replied the seaman, "in times of peace, but when we're in close action we're only boarders."

*He is either a very good or a very self-*possessed young man who doesn't turn more colors than the hues in a crazy quilt, when his possible father-in-law asks him to say grace at the family table.

City young woman at the cattle show, sipping some kumyss—"What a delicious drink, George. Is it made from the product of the grape-vine?" George—"No, my love; it's made from the product of the bovine."

"I do not think, madam," said a husband, when taking his wife to task, "that any man of the least sense would approve of your conduct." "Sir," she replied, "perhaps you are the best judge of what people of the least sense would do."

"What does the M. D. after your name stand for, Doctor?" asked young Mr. Toofunny, at the reception. "Many Debts," replied the physician, with a look that made Toofunny forget his venerable little joke and feel that the doctor's bill had entered his soul.

"Are you going to have your son stay on the farm, or will he follow one of the professions, Mr. Hayman?" "I reckon he'll follow a profession." "Does that seem to be his natural bent?" "Waal, you'd think so if you'd seen him foller the deestric-schoolma'am around."

Beware of the woman who, after you have vainly wrestled with the car window until your suspender buttons have emigrated, softly asks you to "permit her," and then raises the blanked thing with an ease that shows she has handled something heavier than a French novel. Truly it is leap year, but such a woman is dangerous.

That Decision Again.

"I have had a delightful evening," he said, as he took his hat and rose to go. "May I call again?"

"I shall be glad to see you," she replied with a blush.

As he walked out into the hall he saw in the mirror of the hat-rack a reflection of the roguish girl slyly throwing a kiss at him, and he turned back.

"I must have that in the original package," he whispered.

He was a Kansas young man, and he got it.

STOLEN RHYMES.

The Girls of '90.

"John Bull"—thus speaks the 1890 girl—
"Methinks you're just too sweet for anything;
There's nothing sweeter, really, than an Earl,
Unless, perchance, it is a Duke or King.

"What boots it that your castles in decay
Scarcely keep the weather from your noble brow;
Or that the moral tone and tenor of your way
Is hardly what it ought to be just now!

"Much is forgiven in this day of ours
To him who has a lengthy pedigree,
And o'er whose head a coronet e'er lowers,
Who leads a foreign aristocracy.

"There's something, we confess, in titled name;
So much, indeed, that such we'd like to win.
So, Mr. Bull, forget that fearful shame
We once placed on your shoulders, and come in."

—John Kendrick Bangs in Harper's Bazar.

De Peyster's Reflections.

In the stately parlor, alone, I sit,
Patiently waiting, my heart's delight.
From upper halls ring snatches of wit,
And childish laughter; the moments flit—
Will that girl ever come down to-night?

I think of her brushing her soft brown hair
Rippling in waves over shoulders white,
Or calmly selecting a gown to wear,
Choosing each detail with tender care—
Will that girl ever come down to-night?

She's drawing Suede slippers on dainty feet;
One can't even read in this dim half-light,
Or pinching her cheeks into blushes sweet.
What mouldy old liar said: "Time is fleet"—
Will that girl ever come down to-night.

That graceful form with its rounded curves,
Her stolid maid may be lacing tight,
Unconscious of half the beauty she serves:
Oh for a smoke, to sooth my nerves—
Will that girl ever come down to-night?

Half an hour: at last, on the stairs, a tread,
My heart beats wildly then ceases quite,
From those lips, a kiss to revive the dead:
"Have I kept you waiting?" "Oh no," I said,
"How well you look in that gown to-night."

—Harry Romaine, in Chatter.

Song of the Shirt.

Now the teacher, the preacher,
Most every made creature;
The doctor, the lawyer, the dude, and the flirt;
The butcher, the baker,
The candle-stick maker
Are each of them wearing the neglige shirt.

But laundrymen hate it
And fiercly berate it,
For naught else their business so vitally hurts.
They'd make scores of dollars
On starched cuffs and collars
If 'tweren't for those terrible neglige shirts.

—Chicago Post

Self-Respect.

A kind old man with a manner grand,
To a passing tramp stretched out his hand;
For he believed in the good old truth,
"He must learn to respect himself, forsooth."

Quoth he: "You should earn your daily bread;
'Twould be sweeter far." And the wanderer said:
"We're two old soldiers, pard and me;
We saved the country in '63.

"We've too much pride, sir to engage
In the pension scramble of this age;
So we're collectin' our fees direct."
And he got a dime for his self-respect.—Puck.

Bringing Things to a Focus.

Theophilus James Hunker had been the steady company" of Miss Ethalinda De Wiggs for a long time.

Tuesday night had found him at the De Wiggs domicile as regularly as Tuesday night arrived, and everyone knows that Tuesday night comes on strict schedule time.

He arrived at 8 and left at 10:30, and he had been doing this for years without once asking the fair Ethalinda if she would be his, or if he could be hers.

These dilatory tactics were regarded with disfavor by Ethalinda, while the girl's parents hoped that each succeeding Tuesday night would report something decisive. But it didn't.

No succeeding Tuesday night ever seemed to succeed.

"It isn't right," said Mrs. De Wiggs to her daughter. "The constant attentions of Mr. Hunker discourage other young men, who no doubt think you are engaged. I really think you ought to bring him to the point."

"So do I," assented Ethalinda, "but how shall I do it?"

"You must hint to him in some way that unless he really means to marry you he had better cease calling on you."

Ethalinda resolved that she would, and she was full of that resolve last night when Mr. Hunker called. She had determined to seize the first opportunity the conversation offered for the planting of an effective hint, and if no opportunity offered she had resolved to manufacture one to order.

Fortune favored her, however, and it was unnecessary for her to go into the opportunity-making industry.

Mr. Hunker had been much interested in the operations of the license court, and on previous Tuesday evenings he had dropped opinions which would have been invaluable to the judges could they have had the benefit of them.

Last night, after discussing the weather and the base-ball outlook, Mr. Hunker remarked:

"Well, Lindy, the license court is over at last."

"Yes, Theophilus James," the girl replied and a close observer could have detected, without the aid of a chemical analysis, that her tone would assay 2000 pounds of determination to the ton, "Yes, the license court is over, but the marriage license court is still wide open."

There was no mistaking her meaning, and Mr. Hunker did not pretend to.

He looked at her for a moment or two in a surprised sort of way, and then, recovering his self-possession, he remarked, as he clasped Ethalinda to his bosom, and imprinted a three-ply kiss on her lips:

"I'm glad you mentioned it, my love. I'll get one to-morrow."

"Oh, you needn't be in such a hurry, after waiting so long," replied Ethalinda, "I shall need a little time to prepare. We'll have it the first Thursday of July."

And they will, unless Mr. Hunker dies or absconds.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Chappie—Not exactly. He simply said "rats."—American Grocer.

FOWLS AND EGGS FOR MARKET.

Advice That May Prove Useful to Beginners.

In raising fowls for market flesh is the first consideration. Select therefore a breed which will make the greatest growth in the shortest time and be good quality for the table. Select according to the requirement of your own special market and your fancy—Langshans, Brahmas, Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Javas or Dorkings. These varieties, with their crosses, are hardy and, if intelligently fed, attain a large size at an early age. The Wyandotte just now is a popular fowl, the silvers, goldens and blacks all having enthusiastic admirers; the white Wyandottes are also receiving high praise from their advocates. It is claimed that they are not only ornamental in the yards and toothsome of flesh, but good layers as well. The dark Brahmas are classed by many breeders as the best of the Brahma varieties.

With careful management there is none of our small industries that is more profitable than raising eggs for our city markets. When eggs alone are desired the fowls selected should be Leghorns, white faced black Spanish, Minorcas or other laying breeds. Avoid the common mistake of giving too much stimulating food. Bear in mind the elements that enter into the composition of an egg and feed accordingly. Oats, wheat and barley are all good for eggs, with just enough corn to supply the proper degree of heat. A sudden change from one kind of grain to another will often stop hens from laying for a short time, as will sudden change of any feed. Whole corn, being hard to digest, should be given very sparingly to laying pullets. Supplement the food of laying hens with an occasional relish of ground bone, chopped meat and charcoal.

"To Rent."

A woman boarded a Baker street car at Congress yesterday with a big red cardboard sign of "To Rent" in her hand, and soon after she had taken a seat a man hitched a little closer and blandly queried:

"Don't mean anything personal, does it?"

"No, sir!" she snapped.

"Didn't know, you know, but you was a widder, you know, and being kinder bashful you took this way of letting it be known that—"

"That what, sir! My husband is on the platform there!"

"That you had a house to rent," he humbly replied, as he went out to talk with the driver.

Oregon City has a darky bootblack who has seen the world. In 1848, he says, he landed in Constantinople as steward of an American clipper. He went a short distance into the interior, met a Boston man he knew who was keeping a public house, and made $75 exhibiting himself to the natives, that were astonished at the sight of a colored man.

KISSING AND OTHER THINGS.

Unreliable Testimony of a Man Who Had a Loose Memory.

Among the letters sent here anent the question I asked, as to whether it is true that ladies sit on the knees of their beaux in New York (as we know they too often do in the country), is one from a born New Yorker, who not only insists that the custom never took root here, but adds that, "except in very high or very low life, there is very little kissing before engagements for marriage." He says that he was not certain about it, but happening to mention the subject at a whist club of half a dozen married couples, it turned out that not one of the women had been kissed until her troth was plighted. A funny incident marked the discussion, according to my informant. One of the men had a loose memory. "We used to kiss sometimes, didn't we?" he said to his wife. "No, sir," she said, with deep indignation, "you never kissed me until after we were engaged; you tried to and you fought for the privilege, but you never succeeded."

"Is that so?" the husband remarked. "I've kissed so many——"

"What's that! What do you say?" the wife asked.

Made a Mistake.

A few days' since, a gentleman was riding along a Possum Ridge highway, when, in making a turn in the road, he came upon an old man badly battered and bruised, sitting on a stump by the wayside. The old man looked as though he had been run through a threshing machine, or dragged under a harrow all over a twenty-acre field.

"My friend," said the traveler, "what is the trouble here?"

"Right smart the trouble," the native replied gruffly.

"Are you hurt?"

"Wal, if havin' a leg broke, arm put out o' jint, an' a head cracked, an' bein' pounded sore, is any sign o' bein' hurt, then I guess I'm kinder injured."

"How did it happen?"

"Happened easy 'nough."

"Did your team run away, or something like that?"

"No, it didn't."

"How did it come about then?"

"It came about through want o' sense on my part."

"I don't understand you."

"Don't eh? Wal, I don't wonder at it. Reckon a Philadelphia lawyer couldn't understand an old ijiot like me. Say, mebby yer don't know it, but I'm the biggest, blamedest old fool yer ever laid yer eyes on."

"Come, don't abuse yourself, but just tell me how this happened, and what I can do for you."

"The best thing yer kin do fer me is ter take a club an' pound my dinged fool head off."

"Oh, pshaw, man, don't talk so. There is no use of blaming yourself for this accident. You couldn't prevent it."

"Couldn't! Reckon I didn't bring it all on myself, eh? Reckon I didn't hanker arter it an' split my shirt to git inter it? No, I reckon I ain't to blame."

"What was it you got into?"

"What wus it? Why the fight o'ce'se. Yer seem determined to find out all 'bout this yere business, so I'll jist tell ye. Reckon you knew thar wus a feller holdin' a meetin' down ter the Coon Run meetin' house?"

"Yes, I heard of it."

"Wal it wus him that chawed me up."

"The preacher?"

"Azackly. He's the identical trick that done it."

"What caused him to do such a deed?"

"Wal, ther long an' ther short o' ther business is this: That ther feller, has been holdin' meetin's down thar to the meetin' house fer nigh a month, goin' it red hot day an' night, an' ever'body in these diggins got to goin', ceptin' me. I hung off, an' sassed back when the preacher talked to me, an' last night he opened up on me in his pra'r's an' hilt me up to the Lord as a meuty onery, no-count old cuss."

"Did he mention your name?"

"No, but he talked so everybody knowed who he meant, an' he went on scan'lous. Said I stole sheep an' whipped the ole 'oman an' sich."

"An' you think he meant you?"

"I know he did, though, as I said, he didn't mention no names."

"Well, then, what?"

"Why, when I hearn what he'd done, I said I'd git even with him, an' knowin' he wus to pass erlong here to-day, I came up yere an' laid in wait fer 'im."

"Yes."

"Wal, arter waitin' 'bout a hour, here he come walkin' 'long singin' as happy as a coon, an' I jest laid low till he got up 'most even with me, then I jumped out right afore him an' begun to r'ar an' cuss an' kavort, swarin' that I'd whip the hide off'en him in three shakes of a sheep's tail."

"Yes, and then what?"

"Wal, he tuck to argyin' an' talkin' soft like, an' I kept on a cussin', an' arter while he see talk wasn't goin' to count, so he flung off his coat an' said:

"'If yer bound ter whup me, an' nothin' else won't satisfy yer, just pile on.'"

"And you piled on?"

"Yes, I piled on, but I didn't whup 'im. I reckon I piled off a right smart suddinter than I piled on."

"Did he go for you?"

"Wal, sorter. 'Bout the time I retched for him it 'peared like the earth ris up an' whacked me squar across the back of my head, slappin' the breath clear outen me, an' then for a few minutes it seemed like a cyclone had ahold uv me, spinnin' me round in the dust an' whackin' me agin the saplins till I felt like thar wern't nothin' left uv me but a few fraclins."

"That preacher was a fighter, was he?"

"Shucks, he wus a reg'lar herecane in full blast, he wus. I thought I'd jist swipe him off'n the yearth the fust pass I made at 'im; but as I said at fust, mister, I'm a blamed old fool, an' I won't never tackle a preacher agin. I wouldn't mind fightin' a passel o' Injuns, but yer kin bet I'll give preachers plenty of room."—Detroit Free Press.

THE AGRICULTURAL OUTLOOK.

In a review of the outlook for crops and prices the Toronto Empire says:—The outlook for our farmers is more promising than it has been for years. Of course, some of the crops are deficient, but it is only once in many years that there are not deficiencies in one or more of our leading staples. If in Ontario a heavier wheat crop could be wished, there is this encouragement in the situation, the quality of the grain is generally good, and prices promise to bring the total receipts from the crop fully up to the average of the last four or five years. In Manitoba an enormous yield is expected, and taking the Dominion as a whole this old-time king of our crops is certain again to take a foremost place as a source of wealth to the country. The oat crop, which of late has led the grain crops of Ontario with its magnificent aggregate of bushels, has unfortunately been affected by a blight, the origin and nature of which is obscure, but in some parts of the province, and perhaps generally, there has been much recovery from the affects of the disease, and the grain promises to be fairly plump. Better fruit crops were expected in the spring than present appearances justify, but there is every likilhood that the apple crop will equal that of last year, when an enormous surplus was exported to Britain.

The unprecedented hay crop cannot fail to have an important effect in aiding the farmer and improving the fall and winter trade, while the barley growers are likely, unless unfavorable weather intervenes within a few days, to be able to present a sample of barley of a weight and color so satisfactory that the McKinley tariff will do little to interfere with its sale in the United States.

But whatever the crops may prove to be in quantity, the outlook for prices is hopeful indeed. The United States reports a heavy deficiency of 58,000,000 bushels. The Indian wheat crop is deficient in some of its greatest wheat growing provinces, and though prospects in Russia have improved since spring, the general situation is such as to encourage a firm tone in the wheat market and expectations of better prices than have commonly ruled during the past four or five years. Export cattle are again commanding excellent prices, and in some sections of the province common cows for the local market are being sold at higher figures than at any previous time in a quarter of a century. If present expectations are realized, and especially if the winter should prove cold enough for snow to remain the usual time on the ground and so permit of lumbering operations and work in the swamps to be carried on fully, the business of the country will be greatly stimulated.

Fall wheat harvest is now over in many of the southern counties of Ontario and is general elsewhere, while several of the other leading crops have reached or are approaching maturity, and are not likely now to suffer much from any unfavorable conditions of weather. At longest, a few days will relieve the farmers of any fears of deterioration in their most important grain crop.

DOURO DOINGS.

A Good Football Match Between Northern and Southern Players.

Correspondence of the Review.

A very interesting and closely contested game of football was played between two local teams, one from the southern part of the township, the other from the northern. They met at 5 o'clock in the afternoon and after some short delay play was commenced. The Northerners seemed to have considerable advantage over their opponents in the beginning, and was it not for a neat stop made by Maurice O'Leary, the rubber must have passed through the stakes. Soon it was rolling about amidst the two lines of forwards and for nearly thirty minutes the goals were in no danger. This caused the backs to get uneasy and leave their relative positions. In a short time F. Moher stole by the careless backs and passed the ball to M. Guerin, who soon scored a goal for the North men. Time, 46 minutes. The second game resembled the first, inasmuch as the ball rolled about the centre of the field for most of the time and seldom or never passed near the stakes. The strength of the Southern team appeared to be in their forwards, who worked hard and never swerved from their places during the whole game. After 25 minutes W. Guerin scored a game for the South. This only urged each to play the harder. In four minutes W. Guerin again scored and then each side seemed satisfied to stop. The following were the players:—

M. O'Leary	Half Backs	W. Walsh

MAX O'RELL ON HIGH LIFE.

THE CAUSTIC WRITER DEALS WITH PARISIAN SOCIETY.

New Leaves Have Been Turned Over and a Hard Day's Work Now Lies Before the Fashionable Belle—So English You Know—The Eye-Glass.

In Paris white is no longer the fashionable tint for pretty faces. The languid heroine, with the small shoes and small appetite, who rose at noon and began the business of her butterfly day a little before sundown, has given place to a vigorous young person who takes her morning tub at the same hour as a city clerk, affects a nourishing diet of rosbif and kindred foods, and, clad in tailor-made gowns and sensible boots, sallies forth regularly after breakfast to a real English constitutional. The die-away lady who looks as if she sat up all night reading novels has few admirers in the Paris of to-day; to be in the swim an elegante must be a good walker, a good eater, a good laugher. A hard day's work lies before

THE FASHIONABLE PARISIENNE.

She must be seen abroad at 10 with her little dog, walking to the Cercle des Panes, or on horseback in the Bois de Boulogne, getting up her appetite for lunch at noon. This is clearly an improvement on the old style of things, for the day of a fashionable woman who had pretensions to beauty used to begin with an hour's sitting at her chamber window to give an air bath to her complexion, a process tiresome at the best. On the way home from the Bois there is, perhaps, some elegant trifle to be tried on at Worth's or Felix's. After lunch there are intimate friends to be received and gossiped with until it is time to be off to picture galleries, flower sales, sales of bric-a-brac. Refreshed with a change of toilet our belle is next to be seen at 5-o'clock teas, flitting from one friend's house to another. At 6 she must make her appearance at some garden party, another English institution almost as flourishing as le feeve o'clock. One of the latest fads of fashion is to give dinners on the Eiffel tower. No need for our tired beauty to drive home to change her frock again, for the cream of Parisian society has decided that a high-necked dress and a bonnet form the correct costume for dining in mid-air. So the flower-decked lift takes her up to her hostess as she is, and, by and by, refreshed by a good dinner and the sojourn in the upper atmosphere, she is ready to don some wonderful creation of the man milliner and put in an appearance at the opera or a ball, perhaps both. It is little wonder that she has to call in the aid of massage and cold douches for her tired nerves and the friendly raw veal cutlet for her complexion.

SO ENGLISH, YOU KNOW.

If imitation be the sincerest flattery, English society ought to feel very flattered. Since le sport was acclimatized across the channel the tailor-made gown, the low heeled boot, the constitutional walk, the afternoon tea, the garden party have all been copied from the British. Occasionally one hears of the most amusing absurdities perpetrated by Anglo-maniacs in France. Not long ago a French friend of mine described to me a dinner at which he convives were young men of hig lif. The menu was excellent, the table appointments perfect, but the great feature of the feast was silence. It had been agreed beforehand that there should be no conversation. And this was supposed to be "so English, you know!"

THE STRINGLESS EYE-GLASS.

The young French dandy takes kindly, too, to the single eye-glass, which, to be really effective, must now be worn without any string. I do not mean that the string takes away from the virtue of the glass, but it has been decided that it detracts from the stylishness of the elegant aid to vision. An eye-glass must not now be an appendage, but a part of oneself. The aim is clearly to show that one is so confident of his ability to maintain the glass in position that a string is needless. The great consideratum is to be able to eat with it, ride with it, dance with it, laugh with it, sneeze with it (if you can sne with it so much the better), in fact, to look as if you slept with it and found it in its place in the morning. Of course accidents will happen to the best regulated eye-glasses, and, necessarily, part of the training for wearing a stringless one properly is to learn to pick it up nonchalantly when it does stray from home, unless you adopt Mr. Whistler's plan; he carried a supply in his waistcoat pocket, and if one deserts him replaces the rambler out of this reserve stock.—Max O'Rell.

The north pier of the Hastings bridge was completed on Saturday, the Star says, and the workmen are now engaged on the most difficult part, that is the central pier which is to be located in midstream where the water is deep and the current very strong. A timber caisson must be sunk before the masons can get to work again.

Koh-i-nur! Koh-i-nur!

Every brand of tea has its own peculiarities. So to get a perfect Tea, you can only do so by blending these different kinds in proportion, that by so doing the one flavor benefits the other. This being the case, how is it possible to obtain such perfection? Only by a long practical experience and having at your disposal large quantities of the several Brands to operate with. Such are the conditions by which the Tea is introduced for the first time to the Canadian public under the name and brand of Koh-i-nur. This Tea has been carefully blended by those who have been engaged, and have had a life's experience, in the trade. For sale at Hawley Bros.' tea store. d13w30

The Umpire Hits Back.

The Hastings Star says:—"Baseball is booming in our town at present, not only has a formidable rival to the Maple Leaf's arisen, in the shape of the Stars, but a third team 'The Leatherheads' have been formed and played their first game on Saturday afternoon, winning by a score of 18 to 6. The Leatherheads are all tannery men. As the new teams especially the Stars show considerable ability, should either of them by chance meet the Peterboroughs the press of that town must seek for some other excuse besides the hackneyed one of 'umpire' to account for the defeat of their bumptious baseballers."

After Them.

The Chief of Police received a circular this morning with a portrait and description of Wm. Guy, a baggage master of Hurley, Wis., who made off with $3,000 belonging to the United States Express Co. A reward of $500 is offered for his arrest and the recovery of the money. Word was also received from the Chief of Police of Perth giving a description of three suspicious characters who are believed to be the men who burglarized the store of Mr. J. A. McAllister, Perth, and carried off a quantity of clothing.

Robt. Fanning Injured.

On Wednesday while workmen were lifting a large wheel at the Wm. Hamilton Coy's shop, the driver of the delivery wagon, Mr. R. Fanning, was injured. The large crane in the old moulding shop was being used and under the strain the old brick walls spread and the crane dropped. Fanning was struck by a falling beam and by some of the bricks, but was able to crawl out of the debris. Assistance was promptly given and a medical man called and Fanning taken home. This morning he is reported as being confined to bed with injuries to the chest, though how serious is not known.

The Old Market Building Again on Fire.

Just after the town clock struck four this morning the fire alarm rung out, the compositors in the Times office having seen smoke issuing from the old market building. The firemen were promptly on hand and, with some difficulty, extinguished the blaze. The fire started, or was started, under the stairs leading to the gallery, a place that was pretty well saturated with oil, as an oil can had stood there for some time. It ran up the stairs to the gallery and caught in the ceiling and was burning between the ceiling and the roof when it was discovered. A hole had to be cut in the roof and the hose dragged up the tower to get at it. It is, of course, not known as a certainty how it started, but while some persons think it might have been accidentally done, the circumstance point very strongly to incendiarism, especially as the building has been on fire several times. The damage probably amounts to $200.

Croup, Whooping Cough and Bronchitis immediately relieved by Shiloh's Cure. Sold by Geo. A. Schofield, Druggist, Peterborough.

Literary Notes.

"Looking Forward," by Isabel Garlson (Mrs. W. R. Smith) is a new romance published by J. Theo. Robinson, of Montreal. Many writers have adopted the plan of using romance to deliver a message, and "Looking Backward" is a late instance of this. The authoress of "Looking Forward" has also adopted this idea. But her work is in no sense a parody on Mr. Bellamy's, although the title might suggest such an idea, for her romance is one of love and disappointment and tragical reunion, and her message is, of all things, one calling for the annexation of Canada to the United States. The interweaving of politics into the story can hardly be called a success, apart altogether from the soundness or unsoundness of the political idea, for annexation has nothing at all to do with the story and has too much the appearance of being dragged in by the ears. It would not make a particle of difference to Garoya, or Reginald, or W. de la Roche if annexation had never been mentioned and not one current in their lives is affected by it. The politics therefore mars the book as a story, and it is only saved from failure because the political discussions and plots occupy a comparatively small part of the book. The story, however, is interesting and well told and as a first literary effort gives promise of better work.

Wm. Bryce, Toronto, has published a revised edition of the "Home Made Cook Book," a complete manual of practical, economical, palatable and healthful cookery. It contains 220 clearly printed pages of recipes for preparing everything from roasts to candies, and will be very helpful to housekeepers.

Two recent works of fiction in John Lovell & Son's (Montreal) copyright series are "A True Friend," by Adeline Sergeant, and "A Scarlet Sin," by Florence Marryat, both strong and popular writers of popular stories.

BUENOS AYERS BOMBARDED.

One Thousand Persons Killed and Thousands Wounded—Buildings Damaged.

By Telegraph to the Review.

BUENOS AYRES,—July 31.—During the insurrection here the ironclads fleet which joined the revolutionary movement bombarded the city for two days. Serious damage was done to many buildings, especially those in the vicinity of the Plaza Victoria. One thousand persons were killed and five thousand wounded. The shipping in the port sustained no damage.

Ho! for Belleville.

A grand excursion under the auspices of the E.B.A. & C.M.B.A. Societies will be run to Belleville on the Civic holiday, Thursday, August 14th. The committee having charge of this excursion are sparing no pains to make it the most successful ever run out of town. They have secured the fine Agricultural Park in Belleville where games of all kinds will take place, including a grand baseball match between the Nimble Nine of Belleville and the Peterboroughs. Amongst other attractions offered to pleasure seekers is a trip across the Bay of Quinte to Massassaga Park, one of the most beautiful spots on Lake Ontario. This excursion will be run by special train and the fare for the round trip, one hundred and thirty-five miles, is only one dollar. 1d26

Matrimonial.

Last evening at the residence of Mr. John Frise, Murray-st., Mr. John C. Miller and Miss Mary Frise were united in the holy bonds of wedlock. Rev. J. H. Locke, pastor of the George-st. Methodist church, performed the ceremony in the presence of a number of the immediate friends of the contracting parties. Miss Katie Frise, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Mr. S. Coveney assisted the groom. After the ceremony the company sat down to a nicely got up wedding supper, and the evening was very pleasantly spent. The bride received a large number of very handsome presents, which were a testimony of the esteem in which she is held by her acquaintances. Among the presents was a beautiful hanging lamp from the members of the Y.M.C.A. band, of which Mr. Miller is leader. Mr. and Mrs. Miller begin life together with the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

East Durham Crop Prospects.

The Port Hope Times says:—"In conversation with members of the farming community throughout East Durham we learn that the crops for the present season are much brighter than for years previous. If better prices rule during the fall, the farmers will be very comfortably situated. The hay crop has been harvested, and has proved a more abundant crop than for many years. Prices have accordingly dropped, and hay is selling on the market to-day for $5 per ton. Wheat prospects are good, and any drought which may come hereafter will not materially affect it, as most of the crop is in the stock. Fall wheat has done specially well. Oats are fair; late sowed have not thrived so well, but the early sowed crop is first class. Putting the good with the bad, the oat crop will be well up to the average. Barley has not been sown to so great an extent as in former years, owing to the low prices which ruled last fall, but the crop, though light, is well filled out, and will make a fair showing. Peas are also good. On the whole, the farming community will be in a much better position than they have been for some time, and the natural effect on the general interests of the county will be a pleasing and welcome one."

Toronto Live Stock Market.

In its review of the market this week the Toronto Empire says:—Receipts at the western cattle yards last week were 2,023 cattle, 2,267 sheep and lambs and 324 hogs. To-day fully 55 loads of live stock came in, including about 500 sheep and lambs. 50 hogs and about the same number of calves. This, with about 17 loads that came in on Monday, made the market more than well supplied, and, as a consequence, the feeling was weak, although in small stock a certain amount of strength was noted. Half-fat inferior cattle still continue to come forward and no improvement in the condition of affairs need be expected till receipts become smaller and the quality of the stock improves. Had it not been for the buying that has been done on Montreal account in the past couple of weeks the market would undoubtedly be lower than it is, and even with the large outside purchases that have been made the market has weakened considerably under the influence of supplies much too large for the present trade. Not all the stuff was sold to-day, and several loads had to be sent through to Montreal to find a market there.

Export cattle and stockers—Exporters here are still much exercised over the question of ocean freights, which they claim are much too high to permit of any profit being made on shipments in the present condition of the English markets. The syndicate in Montreal appears to have secured all the available space offering, and those exporters who are not in the ring and have cattle to ship are simply compelled to come to their terms. It appears, according to the Empire's despatch from Montreal yesterday, that our representative, calling upon one of the parties alleged to be in the deal, was told that the statement made that 85s had been paid for space was an exaggeration, and he quoted rates to Aberdeen at 70s. What the Empire stated was that 85s had been asked in Montreal for space to Aberdeen, with 82s offered but refused, and this the Empire believes to be a fact. In any case, however, it was stated to-day by one shipper that he had last week paid 85s to Aberdeen, without insurance, but that he was allowed to put five bullocks in the space usually allotted to four. This shipper stated that he had secured the space from Mr. Crowe, of Montreal. Another exporter told the Empire to-day that he had contracted for space this week to Aberdeen through the syndicate at 60s. space, he claimed, that had been secured by the syndicate at slightly over 60s., the Toronto exporter thus paying the difference. In regard to the matter of freights, however, that is a matter for the syndicate, outside exporters and the steamship companies to fight out for themselves. The Montreal syndicate are still buying stockers here, and to day their agents purchased about 200 head at very reasonable prices. They have orders it is said, for about 300 head altogether this week. One thing is certain, that this purchasing has had a steadying effect upon the market here, for without it cattle would in all probability have been actually sacrificed. A result of the late operations in freights in Montreal, however, has been that local shippers are holding off in some cases till they can procure space at more reasonable figures. Not a great many fat export cattle were received on the market to-day, nor was there an active demand for them. About the highest price was 4¾c per lb., and the range was from 4¼ to 4½c. per lb., with some going as low as 4c. per lb. Stockers were as usual in good supply and, although there was fairly active buying, the market was weaker. Cable reports from the old country are not favorable, and the present condition of the English and Scotch markets, with the high freights here, do not leave much, if any, margin of profit for the shipper. Prices for fair to good stockers to-day ranged from $3.25 to $3.65 per cwt., with best lots going at $3.75 per cwt.

SOUTH MONAGHAN NEWS.

The Corner Stone of Christ Church, Bailieboro, Laid with Appropriate Ceremony.

Correspondence of the Review.

Monday was a red letter day in the history of Bailieboro. Anyone passing through the village in the morning would see that something unusual was about to take place—flags floating in the beautiful summer breeze, busy people moving about, choice flowers being carried in the direction of a new building. Presently a large crowd began to gather from Port Hope, Peterborough, Millbrook and Garden Hill. At about three o'clock the clergy began to assemble in the Orange Hall and shortly after in surplice and stole, preceded by the choir and Sunday school singing the well-known hymn, "The Church's one foundation is Jesus Christ her Lord," (No 500 C. H.), marched in solemn procession to the site of the new church which is being erected on the south-east corner of the village. On reaching the platform, which had been erected and which was decorated with choice flowers, flags, &c., the 48th Psalm was sung, after which the rector read the prayers prescribed by the Bishop for laying the corner stone and were the same as used at laying the corner stone of St. Alban's Cathedral in Toronto, in 1887. The contractor, Mr. A. Rutherford, of Peterborough, then stepped forward and presented the rector with a handsome silver trowel with which he proceeded to lay the corner stone, saying, "In the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost we lay this corner stone of Christ Church, Bailieboro, &c." Hymn 207, "Christ is the foundation of the House we Raise," was sung, and other prayers were offered. Addresses were then delivered by the Rev. Mr. Rooney, of Perry Town, Rev. Mr. Burgess, of Bethany, the Rev. D. N. McCamus, Methodist minister, H. Ward, Esq., M.P., T. B. Collins, Esq., and J. F. Clarke, Esq. Hymn 294, "Holy Offerings rich and rare," was sung while the offertory was taken up, the rector placing the alms on the stone saying, "All things come of Thee, O God, and of Thine own do we give Thee." The doxology was then sung, after which the rector pronounced the benediction. The offertory amounted to $90, including subscriptions from Hy. Ward, Esq., M.P., Wm. Campbell, Esq., Garden Hill, T. B. Collins, Esq., Millbrook, and J. F. Clarke, Esq., Port Hope, Jas. Stevenson, Esq., M.P., Mayor of Peterborough, had written expressing his regret at being unable to be present and enclosed a cheque for $25.00. J. R. Stratton, Esq., M.P.P., also wrote expressing regret that a previous engagement in Toronto would prevent him from being present. Mr. George Campbell, of Millbrook, whose election has been recently protested, was also invited, but he omitted to put in an appearance or even to send a reply. Most of those present then adjourned to the Lucas hall, where a sumptuous tea was served by the finest bevy of ladies it has been our privilege to meet. The tables were well filled with the choicest delicacies which would tempt the most fastidious appetites. The proceeds, including sale of lemonade, amounted to about $46. Before leaving the rector announced his intention of subscribing $100 to the building fund. The church, which is to be built of white brick, is from plans prepared by Mr. B. Aylesworth, of Toronto, is being built by Mr. A. Rutherford, the celebrated contractor of Peterborough. It is 53x30, with chancel 28x22, vestry, bell tower and spire, the contract price being $4,100, and when completed will be one of the most handsome structures between Port Hope and Peterborough. In the casting of the stone was placed a five and ten cent piece bearing date 1890, a 25 cent piece, also the Daily Empire and Globe of July 28, 1890, the Churchman, Millbrook Reporter, also the name of the Bishop, Rector, assistant minister, architect, contractor, church warden, building committee and secretary. The Rector spoke in the highest terms of the way the work had been carried out so far, and in a complimentary manner assured Mr. Rutherford that he had no fear but that at the completion of the work he would be able to compliment him on the excellence of the work and thus add another laurel to his fame as a contractor. The silver trowel presented to the Rector, which was beautifully engraved and executed with great skill and taste, bore the following inscription:—"Presented to the Rev. T. W. Allen, Rector of Cavan, Rural Dean and Canon of St. Alban's Cathedral, on the occasion of laying the corner stone of Christ Church, Bailieboro, July 28th, 1890."

LAWN SOCIAL.—The Presbyterian Sunday school held a social at Mr. John Yate's, of Cavan. Previously the grounds were all decorated with arches, etc., hymns were sung, croquet and every other amusement was duly provided. Tea was served at 5 o'clock. As night was coming on Chinese lanterns could be seen hanging all around. But unfortunately a heavy shower of rain came down and spoiled the latter part of the evening.

FUNERAL.—The remains of Mr. E. B. Graham were laid to rest in the Baptist burying ground on the 24th. He was formerly a resident here and will be missed. We are sure his friends here will be sorry to hear of his death.

FROM TORONTO.—Rev. W. Hunter, of Toronto, is giving us a visit here. He preached a sermon in the Methodist church on the 26th. He also delivered a speech at the lawn social above spoken of.

KEENE CHRONICLES.

Rather Rough on the Baseball Lads and Umpire—Notes.

Correspondence of the Review.

A GREAT? BALL GAME.—A party of cheeky youngsters sailed down on our quiet locality to play a ball game with our boys. They brought an umpire with them from the city of Hamilton, one of the suburbs of Toronto, who thinks he is fit for a League umpire or slugger, whatever comes handy. We have seen rank umpires, but this one discounts them all. He made his rules as he needed them, gave directions to the curve(?) pitcher for Peterborough, acted as captain for his team, and called a player out or not out as it suited him to do so. Another of the Peterborough team acted as scorer and counted runs that were never earned by his team. Taken altogether it was great farce played by a few city dudes. General Butler, of Keene, should let others arrange matches after this.

CAMPING.—A large party of ladies and gentlemen from here are camped at Foley's Bay, Rice Lake, and are having a grand time "killing mosquitoes," &c.

METHODIST CHURCH.—The regular quarterly meeting will be held on Sunday morning next at 10.30.

VETERINARY.—Dr. Johnston is extending his practice as he intends to visit Westwood on the 1st and 3rd Saturdays of each month and Roseneath the 2nd and 4th Saturdays from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. The doctor has had great success since he came here.

SHOEMAKER.—Our shoemaker reports business good and employs a man all the time now. For a good fit and close price try Mac.

TINSMITH.—Mr. Crowter is also doing well in his new stand opposite the Keene public school.

QUICK INSURANCE PAYMENT.—The Ontario Mutual Life Company through their agent, Mr. Cameron, of Peterborough, paid over the amount of the late Duncan McIntyre's risk this week.

IMPROVEMENTS.—Mr. T. Campbell, of Messrs. Campbell & McNeil, has greatley improved his residence. Dr. Campbell is also refitting his greenhouse.

FOUL BROOD AMONG BEES.

Its Cause And Cure By William M'Evoy, of Woodburn.

Foul brood is a disease that is caused by the rotting of uncared for brood. It usually originates in spring in weak colonies that have spring-dwindled so badly that they have not bees enough left to cover or care for all the brood, and if the spring keeps raw and backward the bees will crowd together to keep each other warm, leaving the uncared for brood to die and rot in the cells. The brood covered by the bees in time hatches, which so increases the force of the colony that a wider circle of comb is covered by the bees taking in the space occupied by the decaying brood. Then the brood that is fed in these cells where brood lately rotted down will have to consume their food mixed with the remains of decayed brood; and that is the real and only cause of foul brood.

Some will say that many a time they have put combs with decayed brood in colonies and never saw any bad results. Very true, but they do such things in the honey season and put them in the strongest colonies, where the bees will clean them out at once. If we want our colonies to keep in a healthy state we must keep all decayed brood out of them.

Foul brood will almost be a thing of the past when every bee-keeper knows the real cause of it, looks well after his bees in the spring and sees that the brood is well cared for in every hive; and those that are not real strong must be crowded up on a few combs by using division boards. The young bee destroyed by foul brood first turns yellow; as it decays further it becomes brown, rotten, ropy matter, and many of the capped cells will be sunken a little in the capping, with a small hole in each. The disease is spread by the bees robbing foul brood colonies, and they carry the disease just in proportion to the amount of diseased honey they convey to their own hives.

In the honey season, when the bees are gathering honey freely, remove the combs and shake the bees into their own hives in the evening, give them comb foundation starters and let them build comb for four days. In the evening of the fourth day remove the comb and give them foundation to work out, and then the cure will be complete. Fill an empty two-story hive with the combs of foul brood that have been removed from two or more diseased colonies; close them up for two days; after that open the entrance and when most of the sound brood is hatched remove those combs and give the bees starters of foundation in single hive and let them build combs for four days. Then in the evening of the fourth day take out those new combs and give them foundation to work on.

Let it be remembered that all of those operations should be performed in the honey season and done in the evenings, so that bees will become settled down nicely before morning. Before extraction from the diseased combs, all the combs that were not sealed must be cut out of the frames or some of the decayed brood will be thrown out with the honey. Then after cutting out the unsealed comb, uncap the sealed honey, extract it, and bring it to a boil. All the foul combs and the new combs that were built in the four days must be made into wax, and the dross from the wax extractor must be buried, because what runs out with the wax would not be heated enough to kill the spores; and if it was thrown out where the bees could get at it, it would start the disease again. When the diseased brood that was placed in the two-story hive is hatched and the bees are given full sheets of foundation, then they should at once be given a queen cell ready to hatch out, or a young queen. Then everything will be all right.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used by mothers for children teething for over fifty years with perfect success. It relieves the little sufferer at once, produces natural, quiet sleep by freeing the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste, soothes the child, softens the gums, allays pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

KNOW HOW
—TO—
KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"And what say you, sir lieutenant?"

Alaric trembled, for this was addressed to him. He knew that the duke was anxious to crush his friend, and he feared to draw the wrath of that powerful nobleman down upon his head. But a happy thought came to his aid.

"Sire," he said, "I would rather you would judge of that for yourself."

"Me judge? And how am I to do that?"

"Let Ruric Nevel be tried here before you. If I mistake not you have some good swordsmen near your palace. There is Demetrius the Greek."

"What—my Master-at-Arms?"

"Yes, sire."

"Why—he is the best swordsman in my empire, I think our young adventurer would fare badly in his hands."

"Never mind, sire; you could judge."

"Why," said Peter, with a smile, "Demetrius handles the count as I would a mere child."

"Sire," spoke Ruric, modestly, but yet frankly, "It were surely no disgrace to be overcome by your tutor."

"And will you take a turn with him at the swords?"

"Yes, sire—if so it please you."

"By my soul," cried the Emperor, leaping up, "we'll have some diversion out of this trial. What ho, there! Light up the chamber. Let every lamp be lighted, for we want sight now. Send Demetrius here—and tell him to bring his round-edged swords?"

Both the duke and Urzen stood aghast at this new turn, but they dared not interfere, for they saw that their imperial master was all excitement now to see a trial of skill at that science which, above all others, he tried to make his officers learn. But then they had one hope: Demetrius might overcome the gun-maker so easily that Peter should not see his real power.

Demetrius soon came, and under his arm he carried the swords. They were of the common size, but with round edges and points on purpose for play. The master-at-arms was a powerfully built man, and possessed a splendid form. He was a Greek by birth, and was now retained by the Emperor as a teacher of the sword exercise.

"Demetrius," said Peter, "I have sent for you to entertain us with a show of your skill. Here is a man about whose power there is some dispute. Mind you—it is all in kindness.—Ruric Nevel, take your weapon."

The youth stepped forward and extended his hand for the other to grasp. It was taken warmly, for the Greek saw in an instant that he had a noble man to deal with. And those two men were not much unlike in form. Demetrius was an atom the taller, but Ruric showed the most muscle.

The night had come on, but the great lamps were all lighted, and the room was as bright as day.

"Sir," said Ruric, addressing the Greek, "this is none of my seeking, though I will confess that for a long while I have longed to cross a playful sword with you. I play well."

"I like you," the Greek returned, bluntly and kindly; "and if you beat me I will not like you less. I can afford to be beat once, seeing that thus far I have never been since first I offered to fence."

"Come, come," cried Peter, who was impatient for the entertainment, "let's see the opening. Now, stand aside, gentlemen."

Like twins stood those swordsmen as their weapons crossed with a clear, sharp clang. The Greek led off carefully, and Ruric as carefully warded every stroke. Then the former assumed a guard, and Ruric led off in turn. Ere long the swords clashed with sharper ring, and soon sparks of fire flew out from the clanging steel. Louder and louder grew the clang, and quicker and quicker grew the strokes. The thrusts were made with skill and force, but as yet neither had been touched.

The Emperor was in ecstacy. He clapped his hands and shouted bravo with all his might.

By and by Ruric's eye grew more intense in its sparkling fire. His opponent saw it, but he could not tell what it meant. The youth was about to risk the most daring feat of all he knew. Steadily burned his eye, and his lips were set like steel. At length he saw that the Greek was playing for a thrust, and he lowered his point. Demetrius saw the chance and drawing his arm quickly back he made the thrust with all his power. He was sure now he had won, for there was no earthly way in which his point could be struck either down or up. But see! With a gliding motion—a motion almost imperceptible—Ruric raises his sword and the other slides along upon its side, and the other point, instead of touching his breast, is caught in the cross-guard of his haft. Then, quick as lightning, and with all his might, Ruric bends his elbow downward with the whole weight of his massive shoulder, and throws his wrist upward. On that instant the Greek sees and feels what meant that strange fire of the eye. He feels his point caught, but before he can close his grasp more firmly the haft is wrenched from his hand—it strikes the vaulted ceiling with a dull clang—and, descending, is caught fairly on the hilt by Ruric Nevel!

For a moment all is still as death in that chamber. Ruric is the first to break the silence. He advances to the Greek, and, as he hands back both the swords, he says:

"Demetrius, remember your promise. I know you are a brave man, for I can see it in your forgiving glance. You will not like me less for this."

"By heaven, no," the noble Greek [illegible], dropping both the swords, and extending both hands, which the gun-maker grasped. "I honor you—I love you."

Peter Alexiowitz, the impetuous Emperor—then in the zeal and fire of youth—leaped from his standing-place, and caught Ruric by the hand.

"By Saint Michael!" he cried, earnestly and loudly, "you stand clear of all blame, for full well do I know that, had you so desired, you could have slain Conrad Damonoff at your first thrust."

"Sire," returned the youth, now speaking tremulously, "twice did I disarm the count, and yet spare him. And when, in my rage, I broke his weapon in twain to bring him to his senses, he seized a second sword."

"Sir Duke," spoke the Emperor, turning towards Olga, who stood trembling with rage and mortification, "you see you must have labored under a mistake. You can retire now—not a word, sir!"

With a quivering lip and a trembling step the duke left the apartment; and after him went Stephen Urzen.

"Now, Ruric Nevel, if you leave Moscow without my consent, you do so at your peril. I would not lose sight of you. You are at liberty."

In an hour Ruric was upon his mother's bosom. He told her all that had happened—all but the last words of the Emperor. He did not tell her of those, for he knew not whether they boded him good or evil.

CHAPTER VIII.

It was about two weeks after the events last recorded that Rosalind Valdai sat in her own apartment with Zenobie for her companion. It was in the afternoon, and a severe storm was raging without.

"Now, Zenobie," spoke the beautiful maiden, "we have a moment alone—the first since morning. And now tell me about that black monk. What did he say his name was?"

"Valdimir."

"Ah, yes. I have heard his name; and if I mistake not he is a sort of mysterious being."

"He is, my mistress; and I am just as confident that I have seen him before as I am that I have seen you before."

"How? Seen him before?"

"Yes."

"But where?"

"Ah," returned the young girl, with a dubious shake of the head, "there is the mystery. For the life of me I cannot tell. He knows me—he knows everybody—and yet he has not been long in the city, if one might judge from his conversation."

"But what did he stop you for? Where was it?" asked Rosalind, eagerly.

"It was in the church he stopped me—in our church of St. Stephen. He was at the altar, and he beckoned to me as I rose to come out. I went to him, and he asked about you."

"About me?"

To be continued.

Sandwiches at Delmonico's.

A lot of men were playing poker at Delmonico's the other night. The party got a little hungry and ordered some sandwiches. They came—a small appetizing plate; also the bill, $14. Shortly afterward a quiet gentleman asked the waiter to pass him another sandwich. "All gone, sir," was the reply. The quiet gentleman beckoned to the waiter and said in a confidential way:

"All gone!"

"Yes, sir."

"Go down stairs and order some more."

"How many, sir?"

"Well," said the gentleman thoughtfully, glancing at the bill and the empty plate, "as I'm hungry, I should say about $2,000 worth—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Joke for Boarders.

"You've left your old boarding house, I see."

"Yes, too expensive. Mrs. Hash feeds her boarders so well that they are continually outgrowing their clothes, and what they save in the cheap rates they lose in having to buy new suits."

Then both laughed a sardonic, diabolical, ironical laugh, which only boarders can understand and appreciate—Philadelphia Times.

RIVAS TURNED TRAITOR.

AND STORMED THE BARRACKS OF SALVADOR'S CAPITAL.

Fighting Still Going on in Central America—The Situation at Buenos Ayres Improved—The Banks Again Doing Business But the Bourse Still Closed.

LA LIBERTAD, July 31.—It is reported that General Rivas, who was recently re-called from Honduras by the Salvador Government to raise troops around Cojutepeque and join the main army operating against Guatemala on the frontier, turned traitor after having had a handsome reception in the capital. When he was supposed to be on his way to the frontier he turned back his forces of 2000 Indians towards the capital and stormed the barracks. There fighting has been going on two days, but no details have been received, as communication has been interrupted since. General Rivas started the revolution against the Menendez Government some months ago, but was defeated. He then fled to Honduras.

Fighting Still Going On.

LA LIBERTAD, July 31.—It is reported fighting continues in the capital. It is believed many have been killed, but communication being interrupted no authentic information has been received.

Quiet at Buenos Ayres.

PARIS, July 31.—A despatch from Buenos Ayres says: The banks are open, but the Bourse is still closed. A press censorship has been established. The formation of a cabinet of conciliation is under discussion. The city is tranquil.

LONDON, July 31.—In the House of Commons Sir James Fergusson announced the Government had received a despatch from Buenos Ayres stating that everything was settling down and affairs were resuming their normal aspect. Street traffic in the city had been resumed.

BUENOS AYRES, July 31.—Disorders continue in the agricultural districts. The Great Southern Rosario Railway has been torn up in places. Troops have been despatched to protect the workmen repairing the road. Traffic is suspended. The chambers are in session. The report that it is intended to establish a forced currency is denied. Exchange is falling. The gold premium is 250.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The Times' Buenos Ayres despatch says: Financial chaos and anarchy prevail. A bill postponing the payment of bills one month has passed the chamber. It requires the President's signature to become a law. Notaries refuse to protest bills on the ground of the existence of a state of siege. Great pressure is applied to compel Celman to resign.

THE BLYTHE MILLIONS.

Florence Wins Her Suit After 1 1-2 Years of Litigation.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 31.—The celebrated Blythe will contest, which began Jan. 15, 1889, ended to-day in Judge Coffey rendering a voluminous decision in favor of Florence, illegitimate child of Thomas H. Blythe, the deceased millionaire, awarding her the bulk of the estate of a total value of about $4,000,000. The contestants included the plaintiff Florence Blythe, Alice Edith Dickson, alleged widow of Blythe; the Williams heirs of Liverpool, the Blythe Company, the Gipsy Blythes, the Savages of London, the Scotch-Irish Savages, James Witt Pearce and William and David Savage. The court's opinion held that according to the laws of the state Florence had established her claim to Blythe's paternity, the latter orally and in writing having acknowledged her as his child. In the case of the alleged widow the court says the contradictions in the case of this claimant are irreconcilable and cannot be reconciled on the basis that decedent and defendant were man and wife.

P. E. I. ELECTIONS.

Results of the Polling for Members of the Legislative Council.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P. E. I., July 31.—The result of the election yesterday for members of the Legislative Council are as follows:

Constituency.	Con.	Lib.
King's	Poole	Hooper
Queen's	Campbell	Smith
Prince		McNutt
Prince		Murphy

Nicholson, the leader of the Government in the Upper House, was defeated in Queen's.

The Kent Election.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 31.—The election to the seat for Kent in the House of Commons, made vacant by the resignation of Judge Landry, resulted in the return of Leger by about 200 plurality. There were three candidates, all of whom were Government supporters.

A Stratford "Move On" Case.

STRATFORD, July 31.—Lieut. Hunt of the Salvation Army was arrested the other day for being disorderly and refusing to move on when told to do so by the police. The police spoke to the lieutenant and asked him to desist from making such an unearthly din, as there was a person very ill in the corner block. The noise continued with unabated fury for two days and the aggressor was locked up and subsequently bailed.

Lightning's Doings.

SHELBURNE, July 31.—John Smith, living in the township of Mulmur, had his stable destroyed by lightning this forenoon and one horse killed. There were two other horses in the stable at the time. In taking one of them out it kicked a son of Mr. Smith in the face, injuring him badly. There is no insurance on the burned stable.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

THE RUSSIAN PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

Cruelty of the Recent Edicts—The Porte's Demands upon the Armenian Patriarch—Turkey Claims to be Friendly to the Czar.

LONDON, July 31.—Civilized Europe is shocked at the receipt of the full details of the Russian prosecution of Jews. The Russian edicts are of the most cruel character. The first edict says: "No Jew is any longer permitted to own or lease farm lands." All Jewish land-owners, farmers and agricultural laborers are thus expelled from their village homes. Unless they have saved means enough for their sustenance they will be reduced to beggary. To intensify the severity of this edict the Government officials have included hundreds of small towns in the category of country villages, and expelled Jews from them by tens of thousands who will thus be rendered homeless. These laws, known as the May laws, were promulgated in 1882, but never enforced until now.

The second edict provides that all Jews, numbering many thousand families, settled outside the sixteen specified counties shall be expelled. An equally large number of the artisan class will be rendered homeless by the enforcement. The third edict withdraws permission for them to reside outside these sixteen counties. All Jews are precluded by the fourth edict from holding mining shares or connecting themselves in any way with the mining industry, and the fifth still further restricts their participating in the educational advantages. The Jewish scholars in the past were not allowed to exceed 5 per cent. among the students at the universities, and this proportion is now further reduced, the result being their wholesale expulsion from the higher institutions.

The sixth edict imposes upon the Jewish students another disability by closing the legal profession against them, while the seventh edict excludes them from the engineering, naval and medical professions and from all government offices.

The cruel part of these prohibitions is that an enormous proportion of the Jewish population are skilled agriculturists, artisans and professional men, who were all adding largely to the wealth of the empire. All these will now be ruined. It is estimated that nearly a million people will be expelled from their homes under these most tyrannical and reactionary new laws.

Porte and Patriarch.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 31.—The greater number of the Armenians arrested for taking part in the assault upon the Patriarch in the Armenian Cathedral Sunday last have been released. Twenty-five of them, however, are held for trial. They will be arraigned before a military council sitting at the Teraskievate. The Sultan's secretary has ordered the Armenian Patriarch to send a circular to the churches advising the people to abstain from demonstrations. The Patriarch in the future will be held responsible for disorders like those in the cathedral and will be considered an accomplice of the rioters. The Patriarch was also ordered to address a letter to the Sultan asking that severe punishment be inflicted upon the rioters held for trial and expressing gratitude for the aid rendered by Turkish soldiers in quelling the disturbances. A council consisting of six Armenian bishops and several Armenian notables will meet at the patriarchate to deliberate upon the character of the reply to be made to the note.

Funeral of the St. Etienne Victims.

PARIS, July 31.—The funeral of 75 of the victims of the fire-damp explosion in the Pallisier pit at St. Etienne took place to-day. The coffins were covered with garlands of flowers. Some of the coffins bore the inscriptions: "To the martyrs of labor," and "To the victims of capitalist exploitation." The whole mining population of the district attended the funeral. M. Ives Guyot, formerly Minister of Public Works, delivered an oration over the coffins, which were arrayed in a line. After the bodies had been interred the local leaders spoke upon the demands of the Socialists. The Chamber of Deputies has voted 200,000 francs for the benefit of the families of those who lost their lives in the pit.

Lost by Three Votes.

LIMERICK, July 31.—At a meeting of the Limerick Corporation to-day, a motion censuring Bishop O'Dwyer in connection with the case of John Dillon was lost by three votes. An immense crowd outside the hall hooted at the members who supported the motion.

A Fatal Explosion.

BERLIN, July 31.—An explosion occurred in the Unser Fritz mine at Gelsenkirchen to-day. Eight men were killed and several were injured.

Turkey and Russia.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 31.—M. Nelidoff, the Russian ambassador here, has obtained a 2-months' leave of absence. In taking farewell of the Sultan to-day he repeated the protest contained in the note of the Russian Foreign Minister against the berats of investiture granted by Turkey to the Bulgarian bishops. The Sultan denied that this action indicated hostility toward Russia.

Emin Fighting his Way.

ZANZIBAR, July 31.—Emin has had severe fighting at Maisai and Ugogo. He killed many natives by using the Maxim gun. He seized 1200 head of cattle. He defeated the Ugogos with great slaughter.

A Hundred Years of Invention.

WINDSOR, July 31.—Magistrate Bartlett was kept busy all yesterday hearing charges of timber stealing preferred against a number of Colchester farmers. Daniel Mahaw and James Waters were found guilty and will have their trial at the fall assizes. William Ford did not make an appearance and a bench warrant was issued for his [illegible]. AN OVATION TO LADY DUNLO.

Sister Flo's Song and Dance Act—The Viscount's Lineage.

LONDON, July 31.—The crowd that greeted Lady Dunlo when she stepped from the court after the verdict in her favor yesterday numbered fully 2000 people, who waved their hats and hurrahed as though it were a reception to a royal personage. Lady Dunlo bore herself with great dignity and bowed right and left as she entered a hansom, to do which the aid of half a dozen policemen was necessary in clearing a passage. When in the carriage sister Flo perched herself on her husband's knee, and thus the party proceeded to the Cafe Royal with the attendant mob howling out its congratulations on the sidewalk. Last evening the party attended the performance at the Royal Music Hall, Holborn. Lady Dunlo and Mr. Seymour occupied a box, the former sitting with her back to the audience while her sister Flo appeared on the stage in a song and dance according to the terms of her engagement. Loud cheers rang through the house when Her Ladyship was recognized.

The former music hall singer, Belle Bilton, thus becomes, without further hindrance, Lady Dunlo, the legal wife of Viscount Dunlo, the heir to the Earl of Clancarty, who is Viscount Dunlo of Dunlo and Bollinasloe, Baron Kilconnel, of the peerage of Ireland, a peer of the United Kingdom as Viscount Clancarty, and Baron Trench of Garbally, and Marquis of Heusden in the Netherlands, and No. 204 in the order of precedence of British peers. The Clancartys, whose family name is Trench, are of ancient French extraction, said to have formerly been lords of the seigneurie of La Trenche in Poitou. They are related to Lord Ashtown of the Irish peerage, to which family Archbishop Trench of Dublin belonged.

The ancestor of the family, Frederick de a Tranche, left France in 1575 and removed to Ireland in 1631, where he purchased the lands and castle of Garbally. William Power Keating Trench, born 1741, member of Parliament for County Galway from 1768 to 1797, was elevated to the peerage of Ireland in 1797 by the title of Baron Kilconnel. He was created Viscount Dunlo in 1801 and advanced to the Earldom of Clancarty, County Cork, in 1803, in consequence of his descent from Elena MacCarty, wife of John Power, daughter of Cormac Oge MacCarty, Viscount Muskerry, and sister of Donough MacCarty, Earl of Clancarty in the time of Charles II. The second Earl of Clancarty, Richard, was created a peer of the United Kingdom as Baron Trench in 1815 and raised to an English viscounty as Viscount Clancarty in 1829. In 1813 he was Ambassador to The Hague and was created by the King of the Netherlands in 1818 Marquess of Heusden.

The present Earl of Clancarty was born in 1834. His son, Viscount Dunlo, the present plaintiff, was born Dec. 29, 1868, and will, if he lives long enough, become Earl of Clancarty, and Lady Dunlo, the heroine of the divorce suit just ended, formerly Belle Bilton, the eldest of the sisters Bilton, of London music-hall fame, the mother of two children by an American named Weston, who was implicated in the great frauds on the London and Westminster Bank some years ago, at one time "protected" by Isidor Wertheimer, the son of a London bric-a-brac dealer and formerly in the clothing trade in New York, will be the Countess of Clancarty.

125 Families Homeless.

PITTSBURG, July 31.—This afternoon fire broke out in a Hungarian settlement in the east end of Braddock, an iron town nine miles up the Monongahela River, and in a short time 38 houses were consumed. Among these were some dozen brick residences owned by Americans, but the remaining were frame houses of two stories occupied by Hungarian laborers. These 38 houses contained 125 families, embracing 450 people. The loss will amount to $100,000, chiefly on buildings.

Justice Claims Her.

BOSTON, July 31.—The hearing in the extradition case of Leda Lamontagne, postponed from last Wednesday, was held yesterday in the United States District Court before Judge Nelson, and the accused was remanded for extradition. She will be tried in Sherbrooke, Que. The young woman is charged with arson, it being alleged that she set fire to her home in which her husband was burned to death. She was tried for murder and acquitted and fled to the States.

Continuous Pool.

BROOKLYN, July 31.—A continuous pool match for the championship of America and a stake of $300 was begun here to-night between Charles H. Manning, champion of New York, and George S. Kuntsch of Syracuse. The match is for 600 points up, to be continued until Saturday night. Bets of 2 to 1 were freely offered that Manning would win. There was a small attendance. The score for the evening was: Manning 202, Kuntsch 103.

The Walking Delegates' Work.

NEW YORK, July 31.—A general strike was ordered to-day on all the public schools now being repaired. There are only three contractors objectionable to the Board of Walking Delegates, but this general movement is ordered to compel the Board of Education to get rid of them. About 1200 men are out and there is serious doubt about the public schools being able to open Sept 9.

The First Case Under the Treaty.

NEW YORK, July 31.—The three cattlemen John McNamara, Henry Allison and James Tynan, who were the ringleaders in the riot on the steamer Chicago and who broke into the hold and stole liquor on the voyage, were to-day held for extradition charged with larceny. This is the first case under the new treaty with Great Britain on which larceny on shipboard is made an extraditable offence.

Fall in Edison Stock.

NEW YORK, July 31.—The fall in the price of Edison general electric stock to-day was due to the dissolution of the syndicate formed to purchase the stock. A syndicate circular released the stock and some owners of the stock sold out.

The United States Tariff Debate.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—In the Senate four pages of the tariff bill were disposed of today and the Senate at 6 p.m. adjourned till to-morrow at 10 a.m., after a statement by Mr. Blair that the bill would be disposed of at the present rate of progress by Dec. 20.

Go On Strike To-day.

CHICAGO, July 31.—A paper here says: Tomorrow morning will inaugurate the sailors' strike, involving every species of sailing craft on the lakes system. The prospective strike is due to a demand on the part of the Seamen's Union for an increase in wages and that every man on shipboard under the rank of captain shall be a member of the union.

Pad City Flour Output.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 31.—The Northwestern Miller says: The output of the Minneapolis mills the past week was the heaviest in two years. Nineteen mills were running grinding 170,180 barrels.

THE TORONTO BUDGET.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL AS A COMMON SCOLD.

A Singular Case Under an Old Statute—Mrs. Pope May Be Sentenced to Be Ducked—A Pitch-in on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

TORONTO, Aug. 1.—At the Police Court yesterday Earl Pearson, who was arrested a few days ago for perjury in swearing that the girl Miss Minnie Moore, to whom he was about to be married, was of age, was discharged, the prosecution failing to establish the exact age of the child bride.

Arthur Chester was arrested yesterday on the strength of a telegram from Peterboro, charged with malicious injury to property.

In the Police Court yesterday Richard Diddy for assault on Michael Powell was fined $21 and costs.

Harry Pennell, a striking moulder, for assaulting Zeph Blaine was fined $50 and costs.

At Osgoode Hall yesterday William Brophy, who was assaulted by James Frawley, the saloonkeeper, some months ago, caused a writ to be issued against Frawley for $5000 damages for injuries resulting from the assault in question. Frawley is serving a term in the Central Prison.

A living illustration of Shakespeare's shrew was arraigned at the Police Court yesterday, if the stories of the witnesses are to be believed. The woman is Mrs. Annie Pope of 40 Price-street, and her neighbors charge her with being a common scold. The charge is laid under an old act, and reads as follows:

> For being a common and turbulent brawler and sower of discord among her quiet and honest neighbors, so that she has become a public nuisance to her neighborhood by her scolding, quarreling, inciting strifes, controversies, quarrels and disputes among Her Majesty's liege people, against the peace of Our Lady the Queen, her Crown and dignity, to the common nuisance of divers of Her Majesty's liege subjects.

About a dozen of the woman's neighbors, including Mrs. Jane E. Hutt, Mrs. E. Tench, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Annie Lawrence, Mrs. George W. Ensminger, Mrs. Catharine Manning, Messrs. Tench, Garnett and Ensminger, testified that from early dawn to dusk she was continually abusing them, making disagreeable remarks anent new dresses or hats which the ladies purchased and making herself a nuisance generally. Among the choice expletives which she was continually discharging like chewed paper from a boy's pop gun, one missile propelling another, were these, "You're a born devil," "a red-headed sinner," "a dirty liar," "I'll smash you with a block," "I'll break your neck," "If you didn't drink so much beer, you would have more money to go to bargain day."

The evidence was very strong and the Magistrate committed the woman for trial. She was released on bail, her husband furnishing the necessary security.

The punishment for the offence is the treatment of the ducking stool so popular in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

No. 3 C.P.R. express from the east, due at the Union Station at 8.50 last evening, was delayed 4¼ hours in consequence of a pitch-in on the road at Myrtle Station. An east-bound freight had stopped at the tank to take water, when another freight following pitched into the rear. The engine was badly damaged, and the caboose and a car loaded with dressed beef on the first train were demolished. The train was running at a slow rate of speed and the trainmen had plenty of time to jump. The accident is said to have been due to the carelessness of the engineer of the second train, who did not stop, although the semaphore is alleged to have been against him. The track was blocked and the passengers and baggage on No. 3 had to be transferred to a special sent out from the Junction.

Inspector Johnston has returned from Berlin, where he has been holding an investigation into the affairs of the Waterloo registry office. The investigation will be continued in Toronto to-morrow. The testimony thus far adduced tends to show that there has been $13,000 short in the returns of the office during the years in which the books have been examined, and that the registrar owes the county $4000.

CUT OFF MISS GATELEY'S HAIR.

She Was Taking a Walk When Two Women Came Up Behind With a Pair of Shears.

NEW YORK, July 31.—Mamie Gateley, a pretty 16-year-old girl, sported a beautiful braid of dark chestnut-colored hair when she left her home, No. 206 Sixth-street, Jersey City, Monday evening. She was taking a walk and was accompanied by her younger sister and Mrs. Brackner, a neighbor. Mamie returned home crying, and when asked the cause of her grief showed her mother where her pretty hair had been severed with a pair of sharp shears.

"We were coming home," said Miss Gateley in telling the story, "and had crossed Erie-street, just below our house. Two women were standing on the corner. They were dressed in grey, and my sister noticed that they looked at me sharply. I hardly noticed them at all, but went on towards home. Suddenly I felt somebody grab my braided hair and heard a snipping noise. I nearly fainted when a pair of cold shears touched my neck. It was impossible for me to move or cry out until the wretches ran away. They dropped my little top braid behind them and I found it on the sidewalk. I have no idea who the women were."

Excitement in Gotham's Corn Pit.

NEW YORK, July 31.—Sensational reports about damage to the corn crop by dry and hot weather caused an excited opening in the corn pit this morning and the fluctuations were wider and more violent than they have been for years. September, which closed Wednesday at 51⅛c, opened at 54⅛c and at once sold at 54⅛c. The only buying, however, was by shorts. After the demand from them was filled holders attempted to unload and the price of September fell to 52⅜c. The rest of the options moved within about the same range. Notwithstanding the sharp movement in prices the volume of business was small.

Sunk in a Collision.

CLEVELAND, July 31.—Early this morning the schooner Charger, with 16,000 bushels of wheat for Buffalo, collided with the steam-barge City of Cleveland at the head of Lake Erie. The Charger sank within ten minutes in four fathoms of water. The captain and crew of eight persons escaped and were taken to Toledo by the City of Cleveland.

Severe Storm in New England.

BOSTON, July 31.—From different sections in New England reports come to-night that the intensely hot weather of the past two or three days was followed this afternoon and evening by severe thunder and wind storms. Lives were lost and much property damaged.

TARIFFS AND RETALIATION.

IT has been asserted that the McKinley bill in the United States Congress was framed in a spirit of retaliation against Canada and to punish Canadians, and it has also been charged that the Canadian Parliament has legislated in the same spirit. The REVIEW has before pointed out that no part of the tariff of the Dominion had been framed in a spirit of hostility to the United States, but entirely with a view to the interests of the Canadian people. Mr. McKinley protests that the bill which bears his name was not drafted in any spirit of unfriendliness or of retaliation, but solely with a view to the requirements of that country. These are his words:—

> "The condition of the Canadian farmer was not considered nor even thought of in the committee, nor by any individual members of it, so far as I know, when the agricultural schedule of the McKinley bill, so-called, was under consideration. The McKinley bill is entirely a domestic bill. It was arranged to suit the American farmers and not to satisfy or injure the Canadian farmer. It received the hearty approval of representatives of the American farmer—I am speaking of the committee of the grange which was in Washington to look after that particular subject. Every item of the schedule was satisfactory to them. You can say with the greatest possible emphasis that the schedule was designed to meet the case of the American farmer, and for no other purpose whatever. If it should hurt the Canadian farmer, I for one shall be sorry, but my colleagues and myself are here to legislate for the United States and for the United States alone."

Some Canadian politicians, who seem to never take their eyes off Washington long enough to learn what this country does require, protested against changes in the Canadian tariff because they might be objected to in the United States. There were objections raised there—by the pork and lard dealers, but it is a queer doctrine to preach that while Congress can change the tariff on the other side to suit the purposes or interests of that country, the Canadian Parliament must stand still with hands down until such time as Congress condescends to permit it to legislate. Offers have been made by Canada to the United States to negotiate a reciprocity treaty, but they have been declined, and it would be suicidal folly for Parliament to remain inactive, no matter what interest might suffer, until the United States opinion changed, if it ever does change, in favor of reciprocity. With Canadian legislators Canadian interests should be paramount.

THE rural population of Erie County, New York, has decreased from 55 254 in 1880 to 52,882, and the rural population of Niagara County from 32,026 to 29,581. These counties are in the United States and have all the advantages of the sixty million market. Mr. Wiman should take a holiday pilgrimage through them.

THE British Government, with characteristic audacity, even demands that Canadian seal thieves remain unmolested while negotiations to establish some authority for their thieving are going on.—Rochester Chronicle.

Oh, no. The British Government demands that United States cutters shall make no more seizures until they show that they are a naval police force and not pirates.

ACCORDING to the returns of the British board of trade for the first half of the present year the importations from the United States constitute over 28 per cent of the aggregate. Think of what distress the outbreak of war between the two countries and the sudden closing of this source of supply would cause the English consumers. And then again think of how many millions of dollars the loss of such a market would cause the American producer. The subject abounds in food for thought.—Brooklyn Eagle.

It does. So does the consideration of the great loss of life that would follow the outbreak of such a war. But let the United States be sensible and perpetual peace may reign on the northern part of this continent. Neither the British government nor the Canadians are aggressive.

IT WAS 10-CENT WHISKY.

Several Persons Injured by Flying Hoops and Staves.

SYRACUSE, N.Y., July 30.—The explosion of a barrel of whisky at the corner of Grape and Adams-streets startled the neighborhood at 8 p.m. to-day, frightened many people and resulted in the injury of three persons. Windows in the vicinity were broken by the concussion and by flying splinters.

James Fayle keeps a wholesale liquor store on the corner and left a cask partly filled with whisky on the sidewalk in the sun for several hours. The day was very warm, and it is supposed that the heat caused gas to generate in the barrel. Mr. Fayle was standing near the cask and was struck over the left eye by a piece of a stave. Another piece struck his ankle and sprained it and a third fractured his wrist. A nurse and an infant in a baby carriage were piled up in a heap and suffered some slight injuries.

Fayle's family live over the store and one child was cut by broken window glass. The explosion caused great excitement, and for a time it was believed the saloon had been wrecked by dynamite. Pieces of the barrel were picked up half a block away and hardly a sign of the liquor could be seen about where the cask stood.

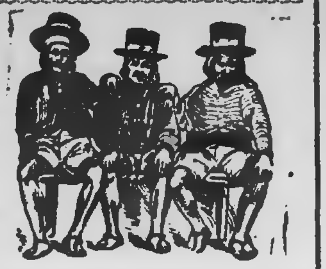
BY REASON OR BY FORCE.

THE STRUGGLE FOR CENTRAL AMERICAN UNITY.

Bloodshed, Turmoil, Intrigue—That About Sums Up the History of the Five Republics for Many Years Past—Results of a Suppressed Despatch.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 23.—The days have scarcely lengthened into weeks since the Pan-American Congress closed its deliberations at Washington, yet, although the chief result of its sittings was the adoption of a resolution for the settlement of all disputes by arbitration and the consequent banishment of war with all its horrid ills from the lands this side the Atlantic, the fierce flames of fratricidal strife have been kindled in the group of states comprising the connecting link between the continents, and a revolution with terrible scenes of bloodshed and desolation has broken out in the most civilized and enterprising of the Spanish republics.



NATIVES OF CENTRAL AMERICA WHO PRINCIPALLY COMPOSE THE ARMY.

Mr. Blaine's ambitious schemes, to the consideration of which he invited all the people of the Western Hemisphere except the Canadians, and the sole purpose of which was the commercial aggrandisement of the United States, have fallen to the ground, and the prospects of extended trade relations between the United States and the Spanish-American republics are suddenly darkened.

On the last day of February, 1885, the late President of Guatemala, Gen. Justo Rufino Barrios, issued his famous proclamation declaring a union of the five Central American republics, "by reason or by force." President Barrios' proclamation was unanimously approved by the Guatemalan Congress and Barrios at once set about to carry his beloved project into effect.

United States Minister Hall was at that time the almost constant companion and adviser of Barrios. Mr. Hall had told Barrios that President Arthur's administration approved of the Central American union and that he had no doubt that the new administration of President Cleveland would follow out the same acquiescent policy. Barrios, upon this assurance, made all his preparations for a campaign. Enlistments were made into the army of Guatemala, arms and ammunition were distributed among the troops, and, what was much more important, a war loan of $1,000,000 was subscribed in less than three days wherewith to pay the troops and carry out the successful achievement of the union.

Toward the middle of March, 1885, General Barrios and his army were ready for action, and the former, to make sure that he was taking no false step, again consulted Minister Hall. Mr. Hall said that he had cabled to Secretary Bayard for instructions, and that the reply had been that "the United States of the North would be pleased to recognize and welcome the union of the Central American States."

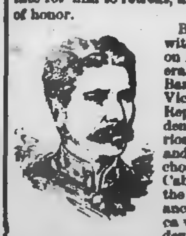
Barrios, highly elated, went on to battle, where he lost his life while facing the enemy at Chalchuapa on April 2, 1885.

It was only several months afterward that the truth leaked out that Barrios had never been made aware of the full tenor of Secretary Bayard's despatch until several days after he had been on the battlefield and had gained two or three important victories. He then received a copy of the full text of the despatch, which reads as follows:

A Partially Suppressed Despatch.

"The United States of the North would be pleased to recognize and welcome the union of the Central American States, if such union can be peaceably arranged. But the United States can never become party to the recognition of a union acquired by bloodshed in opposition to the desires of the people. You will inform President Barrios of this determination on the part of the United States Government."

Barrios wrote an eloquent and reproachful missive to Hall, saying that it was too late for him to retreat, and died on the field of honor.

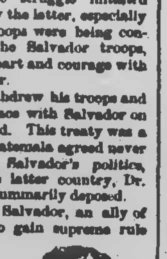


GENERAL M. L. BARILLAS, PRESIDENT OF GUATEMALA.

Barrios was buried with great pomp, and on April 6, 1885, General Manuel Lisandro Barillas, the second Vice-President of the Republic, became President. The entire Barrios Cabinet resigned and a new one was chosen. With this new Cabinet the nucleus of the present disturbance in Central America was formed. President Barillas, though a professed follower of Barrios, saw that it was folly to continue the struggle initiated by the latter, especially as the Guatemalan troops were being constantly defeated by the Salvador troops, through having lost heart and courage with the death of their leader.

Barillas therefore withdrew his troops and proceeded to make peace with Salvador on the best terms he could. This treaty was a secret one, in which Guatemala agreed never to interfere again in Salvador's politics, Barrios' partisan in the latter country, Dr. Zaldivar, having been summarily deposed.

General Figueroa of Salvador, an ally of Zaldivar, attempted to gain supreme rule over that country, but he was opposed by General Francisco Menendes, who after three months' hard fighting, came out victorious, and was popularly chosen as President of Salvador. General Menendes was a valiant soldier and a thoroughly honest man, and was universally liked throughout Salvador in every respect save that he was too subservient to the dictates of Guatemala and her President. This the people of Salvador did not like, and so informed President Menendes, who in turn did all he could to convince his compatriots that his love for his native land would be paramount over all outside influences.



GENERAL FRANCISCO MENENDES, MURDERED PRESIDENT OF SALVADOR.

Guatemala, upon Menendez's accession to the Presidency, began a series of intrigues, which are all more or less connected with the present rupture between the two countries.

While this was going on in Salvador the Guatemalan Constitutional Congress convened on Oct. 1, 1887, and so reformed the constitution that Barillas was to retain his presidency for six years instead of four.

A revolution broke out while the Congress was in session under the leadership of General Vicente Castaneda, the vice-president of the republic and secretary of war during the regime of the "Legales." Castaneda was captured near the frontiers of Mexico, together with all his troops, and he was then conducted to the department of San Marcos, where he was tried by court martial, sentenced and shot.

Castaneda was distantly related to President Barillas, and when he was chosen as first vice-president of Guatemala, two years before, he was invited to take the portfolio of minister of war.

In connection with Castaneda's death a story was set afloat that the execution had been hurried to avoid a father's revenge. Upon Castañeda's arrival in Guatemala he, together with his wife and beautiful daughter, Isabella, became an inmate of the presidential mansion. Rumor had it that Barillas was over-attentive to the charming daughter. Young Colonel Celso Bueno, who was the accepted suitor of Isabella, was sent on duty to a distant post on the Mexican frontier, and some six or seven months afterward Isabella Castaneda was married to a young Spaniard and received a dowry of $40,000, together with a finca, or farm, as a token of friendship from President Barillas.

The recent sudden death of President Menendez is attributed by many to Guatemalan emissaries, who desired his overthrow in order to pave the way for the election of Alvarez.

Menendez was a plain, outspoken man and a thorough soldier and did all he could to make his country happy and prosperous. He leaves a wife and daughter, Senorita Teresa Menendez. The latter, while one of the belles of society in Salvador, was at the same time the confidante of her father and counselled him in many of his State affairs. She is a brunet, tall and handsome, with sparkling dark eyes and a profusion of black, wavy locks.

IS THE WAR OVER?

Buenos Ayres Still Disturbed—Celman's Resignation Demanded.

BUENOS AYRES, July 30.—1½ p.m.—The city is quiet. Business is reviving.

RIO JANEIRO, July 30, 5 p.m.—A despatch from Buenos Ayres states that the leaders of the revolution have accepted the Government's terms.

PARIS, July 30.—A despatch from Buenos Ayres says all is quiet there, and the banks and the bourse will resume business to-morrow.

LONDON, July 30.—The Times' special from Buenos Ayres says: The Union Civica state they found boxes of ammunition in the Government stores empty instead of full as the store books indicated. This deception and the error in not cutting the rails and seizing the war minister caused the failure of the popular cause. The exasperation against Celman is indescribable. Unless he resigns it is feared attempts will be made upon his life. The Bourse is closed and the settlement is postponed until August 9. Exchange shops quote gold at 4.80. Celman has laughingly declared that only a military mutiny could show the people how little he thought of resigning. It is reported that the squadron has surrendered. The Minister of War has issued a bulletin pardoning the rank and file of the revolutionists and declaring 200,000 National Guards are ready to defend the country and President Celman. The bulletin is treated with derision and copies are trampled under foot by the people.

SHE TOOK LAUDANUM.

Mrs. Bush of Woodstock Wanted to Sleep Herself Into Eternity.

WOODSTOCK, July 30.—What looks like a case of attempted suicide occurred last night in the West End. Mrs. Bush, wife of Albert Bush, who drives an ice wagon and who resides at the corner of Oxford and Dundas-streets, was found between 8 and 9 o'clock lying on the floor in a rigid and insensible state. By the aid of a doctor she was aroused from her torpor. She confessed that she had swallowed some laudanum. She acted very strangely for a time after being aroused, shouting loudly and hysterically. She told her husband that she had intended to kill herself and threatened to do so at the next opportunity. She gave no reason for her strange conduct. She recovered rapidly and to-day is apparently none the worse for coquetting with death. Her conduct is all the more strange in that she is a young wife, having been married only one month ago.

Tired of the War.

LOUISVILLE, July 30.—It is reported arrangements are being made to combine the Players' League and the American Association. A Brotherhood agent conferred to-day with President Phelps of the Association. The plan is for an 8-club league. The eastern clubs are to be placed in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Boston, the Western in St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland and Louisville. The Players and Association clubs in Philadelphia and Brooklyn are to combine. After the best players in the two organizations are retained the remainder will be allowed to go into the minor leagues as inducement for them to enter into a national agreement with the new organization. It is believed the combination will be effected in September.

Mgr. Cleary's Projected Loan.

KINGSTON, July 30.—It is understood that Archbishop Cleary is negotiating for the loan of $250,000 for the improvement of church property throughout the diocese. The money can be borrowed from a society in Rome at a very low rate of interest, some say as low as 2 per cent.

GREAT WAS THE FALL THEREOF.

Collapse of a Foundry Roof Ambitious City Notes.

HAMILTON, July 30.—An accident occurred at an early hour this morning at E. & C. Gurney's stove foundry, John and King William-streets, which caused the idleness of two score moulders. All was apparently safe when the men quitted work last night. When they arrived at 7 o'clock this morning it was seen that an enforced holiday lay before a number of them. In one of the oldest of the workrooms of the firm, where twelve moulders are regularly employed, there was a large amount of debris, the result of the displacement of an immense beam, one of the four supporting the roof. Great had been the fall thereof, and lesser supports and auxiliaries, brick and timber, shared in the downfall. The machinery was damaged and there were additional admissions of daylight from each side of the building. For about a dozen yards the main roof had sagged, leaving the superstructure in a precarious position.

The ladies who were injured in the runaway accident at Burlington on Monday evening are all recovering, excepting Mrs. Miller. That lady is dangerously ill, and as yet the doctors cannot say how badly she is hurt. At present she is suffering with internal hemorrhage.

John and Edward Counsell and Peter Crerar were upset in the Bay this morning, but clung to their capsized craft and were rescued.

The W.C.T.U. propose to establish a newsboys' clubroom and working boys' lodgings.

HEAVY FIRE LOSSES.

SAGINAW VISITED BY A DESTRUCTIVE CONFLAGRATION.

The Lumber Companies Suffer—The Losses Aggregate $375,000—A New York Village Wiped Out—Chicago Narrowly Escapes a Repetition of the 1871 Episode.

SAGINAW, Mich., July 30.—The most destructive fire in the history of Saginaw occurred last evening, originating from a spark in a roadway of sawdust and refuse wood. It spread over an area ¾ mile long by ½ mile wide and destroyed property valued in the aggregate at $375,000. The Owen-Hutchinson Lumber Company lose $45,000, John G. Owen $16,000, H. B. Ness, Son & Company $90,000, J. J. Winsor $20,000, Brown & Ryan $175,000, 66 freight cars $40,000.

A Windy City Conflagration.

CHICAGO, July 30.—A disastrous conflagration broke out to-night on the lake front at the foot of Michigan-street, near the mouth of the Chicago River. At 8½ p.m. the indications were that the fire might be one of the most extensive that has occurred in Chicago since the destruction of the most valuable part of the city in October, 1871. But by 10 p.m. the fire was under control, though still burning fiercely. Between 10 and 15 acres of lumber were consumed with not far from 40 freight cars. The total loss will not exceed $300,000.

Five hundred telegraph poles, a great quantity of railroad ties and oak plank, besides wharfing material, several huge store buildings and a gigantic pile driver were destroyed. The telegraph poles were in heaps, each containing 21,000 separate pieces of timber, and the spectacle afforded by the tall masses of solid fire against the waters of Lake Michigan as a background was awe inspiring. The fire began on the docks of Fitzsimmons & Connell, contractors, and quickly spread to the lumber yards of E. E. Ayer & Company and Whitcomb & Company. All about that locality are vast stretches of valuable lumber piles and manufacturing establishments. The region is known as the North Pier. A wilderness of ships and wharves rendered the place almost inaccessible for fire engines, but the fire boats remedied the difficulty in a measure. The scene of the fire is penetrated by the tracks of the Chicago & Northwestern railway.

Supposed Incendiary Fire Near Tilsonburg

TILSONBURG, July 30.—George Francis, a farmer, close to the Air Line, near Tilsonburg, had his barns burned a few nights ago. Loss $1000; insured for $600. John Moore, an old man 60 years of age, who had served two years in Kingston from Goderich about 12 years ago, was arrested yesterday on suspicion of having set fire to the barns. He admitted having slept in them, but pretended to be crazy, and Detective Heenan could not get much out of him. Chief Pow of Tilsonburg did quick work in arresting him. He was brought before P.M. Hare and Mayor Scott of Tilsonburg and remanded.

A New York Village Devastated.

SENECA FALLS, N.Y., July 30.—Fire this morning wiped out three acres of the best business buildings in the village. Careful estimates by insurance men and others place the loss at between $600,000 and $700,000. Insurance $100,000. No accident of any kind occurred during the fire.

A $500 Blaze at Hamilton.

Found Dead.

The Lindsay Watchman says:—"On Friday last an unknown man was found dead on the Scotch Line, near Bobcaygeon. There was nothing found on the body by which he could be identified. He had two suits of clothes on and had two purses, one of which contained $1.35. He had also a slate and pencil, which suggested the idea that he was a mute, but there were parties who said he told them he was from Port Perry, and others he told he was from Port Hope. He was evidently a tramp."

A Snake in a Bar-room.

A bartender at a fashionable bar in town was startled this morning to see a good sized snake running along on the shelves among the bottles and glasses. Being perfectly sober, his snakeship had not as startling an effect as he otherwise might have, but he was an unpleasant as well as an unprofitable customer and the wine clerk felt relieved when the animal was caught and its corpse thrown into the street. Imaginary snakes, it is said, are sometimes seen in bar-rooms, but a real live one does not often find its way there.

The C.P.R. Accident.

The Canadian Pacific train due here at 11 30 a.m. yesterday did not arrive until midnight and the train from Toronto due 11.40 p.m. came along a couple of hours later, both having been delayed by the accident at Myrtle. The Empire gives the following account of the accident:—Two heavily loaded freight trains were going east, the latter following in close proximity, when the foremost one stopped at the tank for water. It is said that the train was protected in the rear by a semaphore, but the engineer of the following train either did not notice it or it was not up against him, as he ran on at full speed and was not aware of the danger until too late to stop the train on the down grade. The engineer and firemen stuck to their posts until they saw that a collison was inevitible, when they escaped by jumping. The engine crashed into the caboose of the forward train, completely wrecking it and the car adjoining it, which was loaded with dressed beef. Numerous other cars in both trains were more or less crippled. The engine is said to be almost a complete wreck.

Suicide at Lindsay.

A man named Henry James, who had been employed at the Metropolitan hotel, Toronto, arrived in Lindsay and worked one day on the gravel train, says the Watchman. He showed signs of slight mental derangement, but not so much as to attract particular attention. He asked Constable Bell to see him safely on the train for Toronto, but got off again, was arrested and committed as a lunatic. On Friday Mr. Jackson, the jailer, was shocked to find his prisoner, or patient, lying on the floor of his cell literally rolling in a pool of blood, and that he was still bleeding from an angry torn and ragged wound in his throat. The only means of taking his life that he had was some pieces of glass from the broken window and with these he literally mangled and tore through the skin, wind-pipe and gullet, but not knowing where the large arteries lay he missed them. At this time he appeared to realize the gravity of his situation. The loss of blood seemed to have restored him to his senses and he evinced a desire to live. The gaol surgeon was immediately summoned and with assistance an effort was made to sew up the wound, with partial success, but it soon became torn open again during some violent fits of coughing. He breathed through the wound and milk and brandy was injected into his throat with a syringe, but he died on Wednesday morning.

The Dickson Co. at Harwood.

The Harwood correspondent of the Cobourg World says:—"The Dickson Lumbering Co's Mill started to run on the 25th inst., and is working faster than it ever did before. About 60,000 feet were cut on Saturday afternoon. There is a large raft of logs here now and a lot more coming. Mr. Humber has built an extention to the mill and put in a large circular saw which works well. The lumber is nicely cut and is of superior quality. Mr. Hazlitt is making great improvements in the mill property. He is repairing and fitting up the houses in splendid style. The boarding house, a fine building, has been very much enlarged. Two large tanks have been erected on the hill to hold water in reserve to supply the boilers and protect against fire, and as soon as possible the railway company will complete the branches into the mill. The yard will have more room for lumber then it had before. Nearly all the old hands are employed again, which helps to account for such a successful start. Mr. Hazlett is well pleased with the work done so far."

Brevities.

—The police cells were empty last night.

—A drunk was run in by Constable McGinty this forenoon.

—The officers of Carswell Lodge I.O.G.T. will be installed this evening.

—Mr. Jno. Harper, jr., of Norwood, left for Orillia on Tuesday, where he has the contract of building a $2,000 dwelling house for Mr. Maxwell Hall.

TWO COWBOYS ROB A TRAIN.

Success Attends a Pair of Dare-Devils in Nebraska.

OMAHA, July 30.—A Bee special from Valentine, Neb., says: "As Conductor Nelson of the Fremont, Elkhorn & Mission Valley Railroad entered the day car to collect fare between Long Pine and Arabia last night shortly after dark two young men, wearing cowboys' hats and with handkerchiefs tied over their faces, stepped from the closet, each holding two revolvers levelled at him. They then marched him ahead of them towards the front of the car. One of the men had a small bag swung by a strap from his shoulder, and into this the passengers were compelled to throw their valuables and money. A brakeman who entered the car was ordered to "hold up," but instead of doing so dodged back and a bullet was sent after him. The bullet went through the door of the sleeper and broke a mirror in the smoking room. All the passengers in the day coach were relieved of more or less money, although as none of them were searched and there was no grumbling as to the size of the contributions, the aggregate was presumably not great.

The robbers entered the smoker, the conductor still leading. At first the passengers were disposed to consider the affair a joke and played with the robbers, who thus lost some time. The brakeman who had been driven from the car pulled the bell-rope and the robbers, feeling the train slow up, jumped off, taking a firing shot at the brakeman. It was a bright moonlight night and Conductor Nelson, who had in the meantime secured a Winchester rifle, attempted to shoot them as they clambered up a high bank beside the track. But as he did not know how to load the weapon from the magazine it refused to go off and the robbers escaped. The road has offered a reward for their arrest.

A Chapter of Accidents.

CAMPBELLFORD, July 31.—Saturday last will be a day long to be remembered by many, a list of accidents having occurred. A boy named Tobin was drowned among the sawlogs; Stewart Shea was seriously injured by a saw; Miss Crowthers lost her finger in the woolen mill; John Roney was injured coupling cars; another youth who was working on the steam shovel had a leg broken.

COBOURG NEWS.

Little Girls Worried by Dogs—Struck by Lightning.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—A heavy thunderstorm on Thursday did some damage. Mr. R. Stinton, of Hamilton township, had a cow killed by lightning, and Mr. Sherarn of Alnwick township, had a fine mare and colt killed the same morning by the electric fluid.

ALONE FROM EUROPE.—Frank Reynolds sent an ocean ticket to England last month to bring out a little girl all alone and only 8 years old. Mr. Reynolds sent instructions to Liverpool to have the child labelled to his address in Cobourg and put in charge of the steward of the ship, and then taken to Montreal and placed on the cars in care of the conductor. Little Annie Tyers was placed on board the steamship Vancouver, of the Dominion line, at Liverpool on July 17th and landed in Cobourg on Thursday safe and sound in the arms of her mother, who was anxiously awaiting her arrival.

WORRIED BY DOGS.—Two little girls named Lottie Fox and Lillie Sugru, daughter and niece of M. C. Fox, near the old court house, were quietly going to church last Sunday morning when they were fiercely attacked and badly bitten by three savage dogs. They were passing John Coombes' house when Robert Hutton's dog rushed across the road and knocked Lottie down into the ditch. Almost at the same time Coombes' dog ran out and sprang at Lillie. The Hutton dog then left Lottie, and, joining the other brute, jumped upon little Lillie and threw her down in the road, almost smothering her in the dust. The dogs tore her clothes badly and bit her terribly about the body and legs. When help came the child was covered with blood. Mrs. Richard Comerie heard the children screaming and ran out to see what was the matter. At the same time her dog ran out, too, and before she could reach the prostrate child dog No. 3 was helping the others in their murderous work. Only for Mrs. Comerie's brave and timely rescue there is no doubt the children would have been eaten alive.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used by mothers for children teething for over fifty years with perfect success. It relieves the little sufferer at once, produces natural, quiet sleep by freeing the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste, soothes the child, softens the gums, allays pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes Twenty-five cents a bottle.

REVIEWS.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.—Most readers of the August Century will first turn to the third part of The Anglomaniacs, because it strikingly presents a novel aspect of New York life. Another instalment of Mrs. Barr's striking novel Friend Olivia sees the heroine and her father set sail for America. A second paper by Dr. T. H. Mann on A Yankee in Andersonville will be read with sympathetic interest, and the interest will be increased by the realistic pictures. Joseph Jefferson, in his Autobiography, writes entertainingly of favorites who have not long been absent from the stage. A fifth instalment of An Artist's Letters from Japan is given, richly illustrated, and Mrs. Amelia Gere Mason in her fourth paper on The Women of the French Salons, treats more particularly of the eighteenth century. John Muir, who writes too seldom in these days, contributes an important paper on The Treasures of the Yosemite. Other illustrated features of the number are W. J. Sullivan's paper on the Italian Old Masters, Sandro Botticelli, with three full page engravings by Cole; an entertaining account by Gustave Kobbe on The Perils and Romance of Whaling; and the second part of Harriet W. Preston's Provencal Pilgrimage, illustrated by Pennell. President Eliot of Harvard contributes The Forgotten Millions, a study of the common American mode of life as typified by the permanent native population of Mt. Desert. A good short story by John Elliott Curran, interesting discussions on Topics of the Times, poems by well known writers, and well filled departments make up an excellent number.

ST. NICHOLAS.—St. Nicholas has a charming frontispiece for August. It is an illustration by Birch to the serial story Lady Jane, and shows the former dancing-master, who has become a greengrocer, recalling his triumphs in teaching the pretty heroine the elaborate steps in vogue during his youth. The story itself is delightful. Some of the summary features are: The White Mountain Coaching Parade of decorated tally-hos in competition for prizes, described in a sketchy way by Helen Marshall North; A Lesson of the Sea, by W. J. Henderson, a simple bit of strong descriptive writing; A Remarkable Boat Race, wherein Walter Camp describes the Atalanta-Yale race and its sensational feature—the leaping from the boat of Yale's stroke after he had broken his oar; The Sea Princess, a pretty picture described in musical verse by the artist Miss Katharine Pyle; Cupid and Crab, an odd little fancy of the sea shore, daintily illustrated by Albertine Wheelan Randall; The Audacious Kitten, one of Oliver Herford's jests with pen and pencil. The serials are continued effectively, and the African and Baseball papers are of the usual interest and value. Besides the features mentioned, there is an account of Miss Olof Krarer, the first native of East Greenland who has visited civilization. The sketch is illustrated by two photographs, showing Miss Krarer in native and in civilized costume. The little ones will welcome Fableland Stories by John H. Jewett, the author of the Bunny Stories, and will enjoy the numerous jingles and pictures which always make St. Nicholas seem brimming over with richness—and they will also be interested in following the fortunes of the Brownies in a yacht race. The contents are well varied, strong, and, as usual, of a high order of merit.

Catharine Tegakonita's Monument.

MONTREAL, July 30.—A highly interesting ceremony took place to-day at Laprairie, a small suburb of Montreal. It consisted of a solemn service to inaugurate a monument to Catharine Tegakonita, the first Indian maiden baptised into the Christian faith—in 1676—to consecrate the new cemetery and to say mass for the repose of the souls of those buried in the oldone, as well as for the opening of the Christian Brothers school. About sixty prelates were present.

Poisoned Herself.

BROCKVILLE, July 30.—Sunday morning Mrs. William Bates was found by her sister lying in an outhouse at her home in Wolfe Island. She stated that she had taken Paris green. A doctor was brought from Cape Vincent, but he could do nothing to save her life, and she died in terrible agony. Mrs. Bates' husband was drowned about two years ago, since which time her mind was affected. She leaves no children.

KNOW HOW
—TO—
KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 1, 1890.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"Ace—and about Raric Nevel."

"And what about us?" the maiden asked blushing.

"He asked me if I thought you loved the young gun-maker. He was so kind—and he appeared so anxious to know—and then he seemed to take such an interest in Raric that I could not refuse to answer him."

"But what did you tell him?"

"I told him you did love Raric. I told him how you had been children together—and how you would now give your hand to him sooner than to the proudest noble in the land. He asked me some things about the duke, but I would not tell him that. When I must tell of evil if I tell the truth, I will not speak if I can properly avoid it."

"You were right, Zenobie. You were very right—about this last part; but you should not have told all you knew concerning Raric and me."

"I hope I did nothing wrong. Oh, I should be proud to acknowledge my love for such a man."

"Aye—and so I am, my little sprite. I love Raric with my whole soul, and would be proud to give him my hand this day; but that is no reason why you should tell of it."

"Surely, my mistress, I meant no harm," the young girl cried, eagerly.

"Hush, Zenobie. I do not blame you. Only I would have you careful."

"And I would be careful. But, oh, you could not have resisted him. He drew it from me almost ere I knew it. He put his questions in such a strange manner that I could not speak without telling him what he wanted to know. He did not say, 'Does she love Raric Nevel?' but he took it for granted that such was the case, and then ere I was aware of it he had made me say so. But he surely does not mean you harm; nor does he mean harm to Raric. He is a good man, I know."

"I wish I could see him," returned Rosalind, half to herself.

"You can not mistake him if you ever do see him, my mistress. He is a strange-looking man; and then he dresses differently from most of our church officers. He dresses all in black—to-day it was in black velvet. But his shape is his most striking characteristic. He is the fattest man in Moscow. His belly shakes when he laughs, and his chin seems to sink clear out of sight. He would be a funny man, and would make me laugh, if he did not puzzle me so."

"And did he ask you about anything else?"

"No—only he asked me if I knew how the duke stood with the emperor; and I told him I thought he stood very well. Then he said he had heard that they had had some dispute concerning the duel between the Count Damonoff and Raric. But I told him I guessed that had resulted in no estrangement, for the duke was as much at court as ever. And after that he told me about the duel, as he was there and saw nearly the whole of the affair."

And Zenobie went on and told all that the monk related about Raric's bravery; and Rosalind listened now attentively and eagerly. It was a theme that pleased her. The attendant saw how gratefully that account came upon the ears of her mistress, and she closed the recital with some opinions of her own wherein Raric Nevel was held up as a pattern after which all men who wished to win the love of woman should be made.

But before any answer could be made by Rosalind the door of the apartment was opened and the duke entered. He smiled very kindly as he bowed to his ward, and then, with a wave of his hand, he motioned for Zenobie to withdraw; and after the attendant was gone he took a seat close by his fair charge. The maiden looked up into his face, and though there was no very serious look there as yet, still she could plainly see that he had something of more than usual importance on his mind. She shuddered as she gazed upon him, for she could not help it. There was something in the look of the man—a sort of hidden intent which came out in his tone and glance—a deep meaning, something which he had never spoken, but which was yet manifest, that moved her thus. What it was she could not tell. It was the prompting of that instinct of the human soul which may repel an object while yet the working mind detects no harm.

But she was not to remain in the dark much longer. The Evil one was loose, and his bonds of restraint were cast off. He had marked his prey, and the meshes were gathering about it. "Rosalind," the duke said, in a tone which he meant should have been easy and frank, but which, nevertheless, was marked strongly with effort "there is some talk among the surgeons now that Conrad Damonoff may recover."

"Oh, I am glad of that," the fair girl uttered, earnestly.

"Yes—I suppose so," resumed Olga, eyeing her sharply. "But you have no particular care for him, I presume."

"For—for—the count?"

"Aye—it was of him I was speaking."

"No, sir. I care only for him as I car for all who need to become better ere they die."

"Aha—yes," said the duke, biting his lip, for in his own mind he had the frankness to acknowledge that he was about as needy of virtue as was the count. "But," he resumed, with a faint smile, "you never loved the man?"

"No, sir," the maiden answered, gazing up into her guardian's face with an inquisitive look.

"So I thought—so I thought." As Olga thus spoke he smiled again, and moved his chair near to Rosalind. "I am well aware," he resumed, "that your affections have not yet been set upon any one who is capable of making a proper companion for you through all the ups and downs of life."

Rosalind's eyes drooped beneath the steady gaze of the speaker, and her frame trembled. But ere she could make any reply the duke went on:

"My dear Rosalind, I have come now upon a business which I may justly call the most important of my life. I have not approached this subject lightly, nor with over zeal; but I have come to it through careful consideration and anxious study."

Here the Duke stopped and gazed into Rosalind's face. She met his gaze and her eyes drooped again. She trembled more than before, and a dim, dreadful fear worked its way to her mind.

"Rosalind," the nobleman continued, "when I was but nineteen years of age I was married with a girl whom I loved. She lived with me four short happy years. In that time we were blessed with two children, but they lived not long to cheer us. And then my beautiful wife died, and the world was dark and drear to me. I thought I should never love again. Time passed on, and you were placed in my charge. When you first came I loved you; and I wondered if you were to take the place of the children I had lost. But you grew quickly up. Your mind was expanded, and your heart was large. I found that I could not make a child of you; and then I sat down all alone and asked myself what place it was you assumed in my heart. Can you guess the answer, Rosalind?"

"As a little child," answered the maiden, trembling violently.

"No, no, sweet one. I pondered and I studied, and I examined myself carefully; and I found that the memory of my departed wife was fast fading away before the rising of another just as pure and holy. Now do you understand?"

"No, no—oh, no!" the maiden uttered in a frightened whisper.

"Then listen further," continued the nobleman, in a low, earnest tone, and with a strange fire in his deep blue eyes: "As your charms of both mind and person were gradually developed I came to look upon you with new feelings, or, I should say, with the old feeling more fully developed. I looked around me. I saw my sumptuous palace without a legitimate head. In my parties I had no companions to assist and guide me, and in my loneliness I had no mate to cheer and enliven me. I wished not that such should be the case. At length my eyes were opened, and I saw plainly the spirit that was moving upon my soul. I looked upon you, and I knew that I had found the woman who was to give me joy once more. Rosalind, I love you truly, fondly; and I would make you my wife. Now you cannot fail to understand me—can you?"

Rosalind gazed up into the face of her guardian and she was pale as death.

To be continued.

A BRUTAL FIGHT.

Woodstock Men Chew Each Other's Noses and Fingers.

WOODSTOCK, July 31.—A disgraceful fight took place in the west end last night in the vicinity of the waterworks pumping house. The facts as related to The Standard are: Griffin, who drives a coal cart for McIntosh & Griffiths, had instructions to allow no one to ride on the wagon besides the driver, and for some time boys have been in the habit of jumping into the wagon, although warned not to do so. Thomas Sackrider's son was one of these, and yesterday Griffin told him to get off, but he refused. Then he threw the whip over his shoulder and struck the boy.

In the evening the father of the boy met Griffin and challenged him to fight for striking the boy with the whip. The Standard's informant states that a disgraceful fight then took place between the two men, who fought in true John L. style for 25 minutes. It was a square "stand-off," until both contestants became so weak that they fell down and then began biting—one having the other's nose between his teeth, while the other was chewing on his antagonist's thumb. Finally a neighbor, named Tripp, was awakened, and he separated the pugilists, but not before they were terribly exhausted. The police were then telephoned for, when the men left. The case will be aired in the Police Court.

AMBITIOUS CITY NOTES.

A Building Boom—Change in the T., H. & B.'s Route—A $300 Haul.

HAMILTON, July 31.—In the month of July permits were granted for buildings, the estimated cost of which aggregates about $300,000. The Bank of Hamilton's building, of course, tops the list, representing one-third of the entire value. George E. Tuckett & Son's factory comes next, $75,000; alterations to Hon. W. E. Sanford's residence come third, with a cost of about $20,000, and A. Gartshore's place in Robinson-street fourth, $10,000. In all over thirty permits have been granted.

The T., H. & B. people intend to run the line through the canal. The route from Carroll's Point across under the Grand Trunk has been abandoned. The adopted line runs under the cemetery and around through Coote's Paradise, then along the Desjardins Canal and across to Carroll's Point. This line will cost far less money than the other route. The tunnel will answer for the Toronto and Brantford branches, forming a junction at the west of it.

Mrs. Sarah Finn, King-street west, reported to the police yesterday that $300 had been stolen out of her house.

Killed by a Falling Tree.

GUELPH, July 31.—Word was received in the city at noon that Mrs. William Geddes of Eden Mills had been instantly killed by a falling tree near the village about an hour before. It appears that Mrs. Geddes and children, Mrs. Morton, Mrs. Duffield and others set out in the morning berrypicking in Mr. Aust ce's swamp, about a mile from the village. The party here separated, Mrs. Geddes and children taking one path and the others a different direction. They had hardly bidden each other adieu and gone their several ways when Mrs. Geddes' children came running back with the news that their mother had been struck by a tree. The other ladies hurried to the spot and found Mrs. Geddes lying beside the overturned tree quite dead. The tree was not resting on her, but it was evident it had struck her in its fall. Word was at once sent to Guelph, and Dr. Herod and Constable Elliott went out this afternoon to hold an inquest.

Incendiarism at Sarnia.

SARNIA, July 31.—Fires have occurred in Sarnia so frequently of late, many of which are believed to be the work of an incendiary, that the Mayor has issued a proclamation offering a reward of $500 for information that will lead to the apprehension of the guilty parties. The immediate causes for issuing the proclamation were two incendiary fires which broke out on Sunday night. The first originated in a lumber pile in Robert McKenzie's lumber yard at 1 o'clock, and was extinguished by James King and Robert Turner. One of the boards was found to be saturated with coal oil. The incendiary, evidently determined not to be baulked, next ignited a wood pile in the rear of the Presbyterian Church. This time the fire alarm was given, and the firemen put out the flames before any damage was done.

A CANADIAN LOCHINVAR.

This Young Couple Disregard Parental Objections and Elope.

GUELPH, July 31.—The village of Oustic and neighborhood, says The Mercury, was somewhat excited on Sunday over the flitting of a young couple. It appears that Miss Tillie Blanchfield of Eramosa and Mr. Thompson McLellan of Belwood had conceived an affection for each other, the intimacy having grown while the latter was in partnership in the hotel business in Belwood with Miss Tillie's brother. The authorities at home, it seems, did not look favorably on the match, and so plans were laid for a runaway dash. The young lady on Sunday morning took her accustomed place in the choir of the R. C. Church of Oustic and joined in the devotions. During the service, however, she went out, cleared a low stone fence, ran across a field, called to her lover who was waiting for her on a stoop near by, "I'm ready," and the young pair quickly got into the buggy and were off. Her flight was not discovered till service was out and pursuit was made as far as Arthur, but without avail, and the young couple are no doubt safely married by this time.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

A Big Mail Robbery—Belle Bilton Defeats the Viscount.

PARIS, July 30.—The postoffice authorities discovered to-day that over 125,000 francs had been stolen from a registered mail bag which had been cut in transit.

Belle Bilton's Victory.

LONDON, July 30.—The trial of the action for divorce brought by Viscount Dunlo against his wife, who previous to her marriage was a singer in the music halls, in which Isadore Wertheimer was named as co-respondent, ended to-day with a verdict for the defendant. The court granted the costs of the action against Viscount Dunlo. A vast crowd gathered about the court house awaiting the verdict, and when Lady Dunlo appeared she was greeted with loud cheers.

To Visit His New Island.

BERLIN, July 30.—Emperor William will go to Heligoland on returning from his visit to England.

The Congo Loan Ratified.

BRUSSELS, July 30.—The Senate to-day ratified the bill for a loan of 25,000,000 francs to the Congo State.

Crushed to Death.

PETERBORO, July 30.—A shocking accident occurred yesterday near the Roman Catholic Cemetery by which the little daughter of George H. May was literally crushed to death. Mr. May was drawing sand from a pit in the neighborhood of his own home, and little Clara, aged 2 years and 2 months, had followed him to his working place. In drawing a load of sand from the pit he had to pass through a gate, and just as the wagon was passing through the opening Mr. May was startled by a cry of pain ascending from beneath the wheels. He was walking by the side of the wagon and had not observed the girl's presence and danger. Promptly reining in the team, he walked around to the other side and was horrified to find his little one lying crushed and bleeding on the ground. He was tenderly raising the tiny form when the team started ahead and the cruel wheel passed completely over the body of the child, crushing it terribly. The mangled body presented a sickening spectacle when taken home. There was life enough remaining for the little sufferer to cry at first, but gradually this ceased and death ensued in about 1½ hours after the accident.

A "Floater" Found.

CORNWALL, July 30.—On Sunday afternoon the body of a man named Joseph Thibeault, a resident of Corwall Island was found floating in a bay two miles west of that town. Coroner Hamilton was notified, a jury empanelled and the remains examined. Thibeault was one of the best known raft pilots in this section. Several small articles were found on his person, among them a deck passage from Cornwall to Prescott per steamer Algerian. He had been missed since last Tuesday. No marks of violence were discerned on him and it is generally supposed that his death was purely accidental.

Another Cornwall man named Smeaton was drowned at Massena on Saturday.

Disabled by a Bird.

ST. CATHARINES, July 31.—Mr. Fred Fitzgerald, says The Journal, when at the 10-mile creek on Monday evening shot and winged a monster hawk of what is known as the whistling owl species. The bird was brought to the city yesterday and Mr. W. Chalew undertook to place him in a coop in the wine cellar of his store. When descending by the elevator the voracious bird grabbed his custodian by the wrist and almost chewed it off, nearly ruining his sword arm.

Montreal a Dumping Ground for Vice.

MONTREAL, July 31.—If the generally current belief that Montreal is the dumping ground for the products of vice of the whole province needed any confirmation it would be proved by the figures given in the mortality statistics for last year just published by the Department of Agriculture. That publication shows that in the 12 months ending Dec. 31 last there were 480 deaths of illegitimate children in this city, against 413 in all the rest of the country, a somewhat alarming state of affairs on its face. In Toronto but 35 were reported.

KEMMLER'S COMING DOOM

PREPARATIONS COMPLETED FOR HIS ELECTROCUTION.

The Westinghouse Company May Again Interfere to Prolong His Worthless Life—He Wishes That It Was Over—Monday Probably the Day.

AUBURN, N.Y., Aug. 2.—The final preparations for the electrocution of William Kemmler are being made. C. F. Barnes, city electrician of Rochester, arrived in town yesterday and immediately went to the prison, where he was closeted with Warden Durston. Mr. Barnes will have charge of the death-dealing apparatus and will probably be the one to push the fatal switch.

The switchboard and other mechanical appliances for controlling the current have arrived from Dannemora Prison, where they were sent for the execution of Chapleau. They have been placed in position in the death chamber, together with the chair in which Kemmler will receive the electric shock. Everything points to a speedy execution of Kemmler's sentence. Although Warden Durston is silent on the subject it is generally believed Kemmler will die next Monday night. The condemned man's appetite is gone and it is only occasionally that he is induced to indulge in some delicacy procured by the prison chaplain.

The invitations to be present at the execution have not yet been sent, but it is understood Warden Durston will send them tomorrow. The same persons who were invited in April will be here next week, and the list includes the following names: District Attorney Quinby and Lawyer Hatch of Buffalo, Drs. Spitzka, Rockwell, McDonald and Brill, Major John J. Jones and Mr. Matthew Byrnes of New York city; Drs. Ward and Nellis and Mr. Henry L. Smith of Albany; Drs. Fell, Daniels and Southwick of Buffalo; Surgeon-General Hungerford of Stamford, Conn.; Attorney-General Hogan of New York, General W. F. Lansing of Middleville, Herkimer county, N.Y.; City Electrician C. F. Barnes of Rochester; Dr. Argue of Corning and Michael Conway of Albany.

There is a rumor afloat that the Westinghouse people will procure an injunction to restrain Warden Durston from using their machine to kill Kemmler, using as an argument the fact that the dynamo was purchased under false pretences, and that the State is not possessed of a clear title.

Kemmler Has Weakened.

AUBURN, N.Y., Aug. 1.—The utter abandonment of hope and his realization of his lost condition never came to Kemmler, the murderer, with such terrible force as last night. All night long the vision of his impending fate rose before his sleepless eyes, and as he tossed and tumbled on his narrow cot he cried aloud in despair, "I wish it were over." He moaned time and again and his utter lack of power to control his fears was pitiable to behold. The cause of this sudden despair was the noise of preparation in the adjacent room of execution, with which a doorway connects his cell. In the chamber of execution men were making a test of the death-dealing apparatus. This morning Kemmler had not recovered from the shock and he utterly refused to partake of any breakfast, and no manner of delicacy could tempt his appetite. Kemmler has weakened.

ALBANY, Aug. 4.—Warden Durston of Auburn Prison passed through the city to-night on his way to Newark. He said he was ready for Kemmler's execution, which will occur during the week beginning Aug. 3.

Drowned in the Niagara.

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, Aug. 2.—Two ladies were drowned Thursday in the river at Youngstown, N.Y. Mrs. Reesor, her sister Mrs. Anderson and Mr. Reesor were bathing and the two ladies got beyond their depth and lost their lives. Mr. Reesor is a schoolteacher near Woodstock. They were visiting Mrs. Reesor's father at Youngstown. The accident was caused by the swell of the Chicora, which passed at that moment. The undertow drew the ladies out into a depth of fifty feet of water and they were drowned before assistance could be rendered. They had been bathing in shallow water.

Drowned Herself in the Surf.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Mrs. Schurig of New York, a guest at John Hull's hotel in Bridgehampton, L.I., was drowned in the surf at that place on Wednesday. It seems she deliberately walked into the ocean with the intention of ending her life. She was fully dressed.

Disfigured Her for Life.

QUEBEC, Aug. 2.—A disgraceful scene was enacted a day or two ago at Cacouna by an irritated father. A gentleman from Ontario is now passing the summer here in company with his daughter, who, it is said, is a beauty. The young lady got acquainted with a young gentleman whose attentions were not appreciated by the lady's father and he forbade her to meet the young man any more. She, however, shortly after infringed on the parental injunction and the father set upon her, beating her brutally and disfiguring her likely for life.

Knocking Out the Bottoms Will Do.

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—Responding to complaints of cigar dealers respecting the hardship of having to destroy empty cigar boxes, the Inland Revenue Department has consented that knocking out the bottom shall be considered destruction of the boxes.

A Light Sentence.

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—John Coolgan, aged 55, was yesterday sentenced to six months' imprisonment for committing an indecent assault upon an 11-year-old orphan girl named Mary Moreney, a few days ago.

DEATH AT THE GRADE.

THREE LIVES SACRIFICED IN THE QUEEN CITY.

Ontario's Grain Crop—A Heavy Yield Assured—Two Attempts at Suicide, One of Which Results in a Three Months' Sentence—A Park Preacher in Trouble.

TORONTO, Aug. 2.—Three lives were sacrificed at the Brock-avenue crossing of the Canadian Pacific Railway yesterday. Patrick Dowling, the driver of the Sunnyside Home wagon, had been collecting goods obtained by one of the Sisters of St. Joseph in North Parkdale and was returning to the Home via College-avenue. When the goods were gathered two boys, Peter McLaughlin aged 13, and Charles McNeilly, aged 12 years, who accompanied the Sister to carry the goods to the wagon, got into it by her instructions to return to the house. Approaching the railway crossing the attention of the occupants of the wagon was apparently diverted by a freight train, as they seemed utterly oblivious of the approach of C.P.R. express train No. 10, Engineer Greenshields, due at 11.47 a.m., which came thundering along, as eye-witnesses say, at a speed of 10 to 12 miles an hour. Although brakes were put on and whistle sounded the driver or the horse was paralyzed with fear, as apparently the wagon seemed to stop directly on the track. The vehicle was smashed to atoms, the driver struck by one of the rods of the locomotive and buried mangled and bleeding on the pilot, and he was dead when the train was brought to a stop. The boys were thrown to one side of the track, and both were killed almost instantly. The concussion must have been terrific, as fragments of the wagon were scattered fifty feet from the scene of the accident. Dowling came from Ayton, Grey County, and was 64 years old. An inquest was begun and adjourned until Aug. 6.

It is now almost beyond doubt that Ontario will harvest a big grain crop this season. Reports from various sources are so unanimous as to its fine appearance that a heavy yield for 1890 may be accepted as a fact. All that is necessary now is fine weather for harvesting. Mr. A. Blue of the Ontario Bureau of Statistics said yesterday that although complete reports would not be to hand till the middle of the month, intelligence received so far was of a very encouraging character. From all he could learn, he said, fall wheat would be a fair average crop, and other grain would average well with the exception of oats, which would be poor. Some kind of a blight, the exact sort of which had not been ascertained, had struck the oat crop and had inflicted much damage. Hay, however, was very heavy.

Elizabeth Ridges, aged 35, residing at 766 Euclid-avenue, had been despondent for some time and yesterday morning took a dose of laudanum. She then told what she had done, and as the quantity swallowed was not large, the physician who was summoned had little difficulty in pumping her out. She was taken to the hospital in the ambulance.

Elizabeth Robinson, the woman who tried to drown herself in the Don, was brought before the Police Magistrate yesterday and sentenced to three months' imprisonment in default of $50 fine and costs. Her husband testified that the woman, who had made two previous attempts to expedite her exit from this world, had been drinking.

At the Police Court yesterday "Jumbo" Campbell, the park preacher who attacks the Church of Rome in his speeches, pleaded not guilty to six distinct charges of using insulting and obscene language in Queen's Park Sunday afternoon. The cases were enlarged.

AMBITIOUS CITY NOTES.

Attempted Suicide—Struck by a Train—Alleged Breach of Promise.

HAMILTON, Aug. 2.—Thomas Baine, who for many years kept a hotel here, but whose license was recently canceled, it is said attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat and wrists. Blaine's son denies the story, and says the wound is a mere scratch made by a broken bottle.

A 13-year-old youth named Daniel Graham sustained serious injuries while walking on the Grand Trunk track at the Ferguson-avenue crossing. He was struck by a train, the result being that his shoulder blade and right arm were fractured. It is thought he will recover.

The inland revenue receipts at this port for July were $41,978, an increase over 1889 of $3615. The customs duties collected were $57,443, a decrease of $12,645.

Senator Sanford has received a letter from the Earl of Aberdeen, who is to be his guest, stating that his four children and eight servants will sail from Scotland on Aug. 8, and that Lady Aberdeen and himself will sail on Aug. 14, by the steamers Oregon and Parisian, respectively.

There is an interesting breach of promise suit entered for trial at the Fall Assizes. The lady is young and pretty and her name is Miss Annie Howell. She wants $2000 to square her lacerated affections. Charles Edward Reding is the lacerator, and both parties hail from Ancaster.

John Gorman, who hit Constable Harris with a stone the other night, got off with a month's imprisonment.

LOVE THAT LED TO SUICIDE.

A Wife Reveals the Secret that Caused Her Husband to Seek Death.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Theodore Legislands, who shot himself in the left breast in the presence of his wife and children at his residence, No. 12 Central-avenue, Brooklyn, late on Wednesday night, was still alive yesterday in St. Catharine's Hospital, but is not expected to recover.

His motive in ending his existence was made known to the police yesterday by his wife. Legislands, until a year ago, resided happily with his wife and four children. A younger sister of Mrs. Legislands came to live with them, and Legislands fell in love with her.

Mrs. Legislands caught her husband kissing and embracing her sister not long ago, and there was a stormy scene. During the latter part of June the young girl gave birth to a child, and in her delirium she accused Legislands of being its father. Legislands admitted the accusation. Mrs. Legislands at once consulted a lawyer and began divorce proceedings against him. This seemed to dishearten Legislands. He made every effort to bring about a reconciliation, but without avail. He told some friends on Wednesday afternoon that he was tired of life and before many days he would be at rest.

A few minutes before he shot himself he sat on the kitchen lounge and watched his wife caring for the children. He suddenly drew the revolver from his pocket and, placing it to his left side, discharged it. When the ambulance surgeon reached his side he muttered feebly a desire to die.

MISS CURTIN USES A WHIP.

Young Men Who Gossip are Called to Account With a Rawhide.

NEW HAVEN, Aug. 2.—During the last few days numerous complaints have been made to City Attorney Dailey by young men who have been publicly horsewhipped by an enraged young woman.

The trouble dates back two months ago, when a young man named Frederick Miller and a young woman named Julian Curtin, whose sister is the wife of Miller, appeared before City Attorney Dailey and asked for a warrant for the arrest of William Brennan on a charge preferred by Miss Curtin. The parties interested in the case all reside in the vicinity of Oak and Broad-streets. The City Attorney refused to issue the warrant for Brennan's arrest, but advised the parties to try to come to some agreement.

Brennan learning that a warrant was sought for his arrest suddenly left town. Since Brennan's flight a number of his friends have attempted to settle the case, but to no purpose, as Miss Curtin would accept no settlement except marriage.

Miss Curtin heard that slanderous stories were circulated about her, and on Thursday night last "Beck" Miller, a chum of Brennan, was standing in front of St. John's Church when the girl, accompanied by her brother-in-law, appeared, and without a word of warning the girl drew a raw-hide from under her cloak and slashed Miller across the face. When Miller tried to defend himself the girl's brother-in-law interfered and held Miller while Julia lashed him.

Miller then went to the city attorney for a warrant for the arrest of the girl and her companion, but Mr. Dailey told him he had received what he deserved.

John Gallagher, another young man who had circulated stories about Miss Curtin, was also vigorously whipped last Saturday. The girl asked Gallagher why he had been talking about her. The reply was not exactly satisfactory and she struck out with the whip and raised a heavy welt across his face. When Gallagher attempted to resist she drew a revolver and Gallagher ran away in short order.

Miss Curtin threatens to cowhide any other persons who circulate damaging stories about her.

Was It a Diabolical Scheme?

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Two apparent attempts to wreck the Flying Yankee, fast express from St. John, N.B., for Boston, were made near Chelsea last night. About 9 o'clock three men told the gateman at the Eastern-avenue crossing that they found a sleeper on the inward track and removed it. At 9½ the Yankee came along at the rate of 50 miles an hour. Between Forbes' Bridge and Eastern-avenue the engine struck a sleeper, which it carried a quarter of a mile before the train could be stopped, ploughing great furrows in the ground and scattering splinters in all directions. The cylinder and steps of the engine were dented and bent and other slight damage to the pilot was done. If the story of the men was true the sleeper must have been replaced on the rails.

Tragic Example of Heredity.

CARLISLE, Pa., Aug. 2.—In a fit of jealousy Jeremiah Miller of Hampden Township shot his wife and immediately afterward committed suicide by shooting himself in the stomach. The woman will die. They did not live happily together and Miller frequently charged her with infidelity. Miller seems to have inherited a propensity for murder. His father, while in jail in 1861 on a charge of murder, hanged himself. Samuel Miller, his brother, was a very eccentric man and was a hermit for many years in the North Mountain. It is thought the entire family was tinged with insanity.

Wealthy But Wicked.

MONTREAL, Aug. 2.—Young Masson, heir to all the Masson estates, who has acquired a bad notoriety by his vagaries, is again before the courts. He married an estimable French girl while a minor, was then interdicted for drunkenness, and all this time was mixed up with actresses and their affairs. Some time ago Judge Wurtele delivered judgment against Masson, ordering him to pay to his wife $150 per month as an alimentary allowance. This has not been paid and now a suit is taken against the young man to compel the estate to pay the allowance granted her by the court.

A Farmer's Hard Luck.

DUTTON, Aug. 2.—John P. McLean has been served with an injunction by the Huron & Erie Loan Company, preventing him from reaping his wheat. As the injunction was obtained at London ex parte, and as the motion to make it absolute will not be argued till 10 days after service, the wheat will be absolutely ruined. As the farm was recently sold for a sum in excess of that due to the Loan Company, Mr. McLean thinks he is being hardly dealt with, as he still has possession of the farm, but is not allowed to reap the reward of his labors, but must stand by and see his wheat destroyed.

Death From a Teacher's Strap.

PONTIAC, Aug. 2.—Frank Cooke, 11 years old, died yesterday from the effects, so it is alleged, of a brutal flogging by his school teacher, Jennie Webb, two months ago. The teacher is under heavy bonds to appear before Justice Webster. Excitement runs high in the town.

A Fatal Bolt.

NORTH ABINGTON, Mass., Aug. 2.—During a severe storm lightning struck the dwelling of Thomas Sheridan. Mary Quigley, aged 20, was instantly killed and Sheridan, his wife and young son were badly injured.

A ROYAL CITY SENSATION.

MRS. BRYDGES RUNS AWAY WITH "JIGGER" HENRY.

Three Young Children and a Hard-working Husband Left Behind—Had Her Babies' Photographs Taken to Carry with Her to the States.

GUELPH, Aug. 2.—Quite a sensation was created here yesterday when it became known that James Henry, a noted local baseball player familiarly known as "Jigger" Henry, and Mrs. Brydges, wife of Joseph Brydges, an honest, hard-working man, had eloped in broad daylight. Tickets were bought for Port Huron and the couple are now undoubtedly over the border. The heartless woman who had been infatuated with Henry for some time, took an infant with her but left three small children at home. Henry became acquainted with Mrs. Brydges about two years ago and had boarded with the Brydges until last spring when the husband became suspicious and ordered Henry out of the house, but he has been an almost daily visitor during the day when the husband was at work.

Yesterday morning Henry brought over a big trunk to Brydges' house and remained there till near dinner. After Brydges had gone back to work he returned again and the work of packing the trunk was completed. The woman put in glassware, crockery, bedding, clothing and other smaller household stuff, and this and another smaller box were taken to the Grand Trunk Railway station on a lorry. Miss Henry is said to have been at the station and seen the woman off and to have stated that her brother was not there. However, he was seen in the car as it passed Bell's factory.

When the husband returned at 6 he found things scattered round and at length got from the little girl, who had been frightened into silence by her mother, the particulars of the day. He found a long letter upbraiding him and telling him he could get a divorce as soon as he had money enough. The note was written in a determined manner, stating that she could no longer make him a good wife or live happily with him. The only regret she expressed at parting was the leaving of her three children behind, and requesting him to be kind to them. She also mentioned in the letter that she had taken bedding, knives, forks, spoons, etc., with her and that they were her own property.

Before leaving she kissed the little girl and said she would come back and get her. She also gave her the wedding ring to give to her father.

Both Henry and Mrs. Brydges have been watched for some days, and it is said also that the family living next door left on account of Mrs. Brydges' carryings on. Both managed to get away, however, and they will not be followed. Henry's people did not know he was gone for certain until they went to his room and found his trunk gone and all his clothes.

It is presumed they are heading for Chicago, as the afternoon G. T. R. express would take them as far as Port Huron, to which place Mrs. Brydges said that her ticket was bought. She answered any enquiries on the platform coolly and with little perceptible nervousness.

"Jigger" Henry was a character of some note round the city, being quite a baseballist up to a year or so back. He was a worthless, dissolute, fellow, but was a good workman. It is understood that he drew over $100 on his contract for plastering Mr. E. Cunningham's house, and took it away with him, without paying the three men who were working for him, one of them being his father.

Mrs. Brydges belonged to an Eramosa family, and her parents are now retired, living near Detroit. Mr. Brydges says the woman did not take any money with her, unless she collected the rent of some of his houses, and pocketed the money without his knowledge.

On Thursday she sent her three children to a photograph gallery in order that she might carry away their photos. The three children left were aged respectively 9, 6 and 3 years.

TOO BUSY TO TALK.

Prince George Arrives at Halifax on Board the Thrush.

HALIFAX, Aug. 2.—The warship Thrush was moored at the dock yard shortly after her arrival and Prince George reported his arrival to the commander of the Comus, who is senior in command during the absence of the Admiral and flagship. The Prince then returned to his ship, and on an effort being made by newspaper men to see him he sent word from his cabin expressing regret that he was too busy to be interviewed.

NEWPORT'S NAVAL GUESTS.

The British Squadron Arrives, But Without Prince George of Wales.

NEWPORT, R.I., Aug. 2.—The booming of guns at an early hour was an evidence that the British fleet was approaching, and later on the New York yacht squadron, bearing very sad news, came to anchor in the harbor, already well filled with sailing craft of all kinds.

The British North American fleet, comprising the flagship Bellerophon and the cruisers Canada and Partridge, from Halifax, dropped anchor at 9½ in the outer harbor. The fleet is commanded by Vice-Admiral Watson, the Bellerophon's commander is Charles C. Drury, the Canada's Capt. Dowding and the Partridge's Captain Noel.

Sir John Ross, Commanding General of Her Majesty's forces in Canada, and his son are guests of Vice-Admiral Watson on board the Bellerophon, and Capt. Jenkins of the British army, Sir John's aid, is a guest on board the Canada.

Suppressing Tolstoi's Book.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—The Postmaster-General has issued an order prohibiting Tolstoi's "Kreutzer Sonata" from being received at any postoffice in the United States for transportation through the mails. Assistant Postmaster John J. Gayler said yesterday that the order to exclude the "Kreutzer Sonata" from the mails had been received early this week. He said he did not know on whose complaint the order had been issued, but that the book had been submitted for examination to Assistant Attorney-General Tyner as to the propriety of allowing it to go through the mails, and he had decided against it.

Fatality at Pembroke.

PEMBROKE, Aug. 2.—About 2 p.m. yesterday Leonard, son of Walter Beatty, was found dead under a pile of boards of the sash and door factory. The boy, who was 7 or 8 years of age, was last seen about 10½ a.m. An uncle of the child's, on going to the pile of timber, noticed part of his clothing, and removing boards, found the child, who had evidently been strangled from pressure of boards on the neck. Apparently in trying to climb the boards they had fallen on him.

The Plan Approved at Rome.

MONTREAL, Aug. 2.—Rev. Father Paragis, who has been the guest of Recorder De Montigny at Mille Fleurs, Long Point, left yesterday to explore certain districts in the Ottawa region, where he has already labored as a missionary, in order to obtain the best place in which to form a new colony upon a plan approved at Rome. He was accompanied by several young men, and the trip will extend over a couple of months. Large sections are to be set aside for colonization purposes, but the plan is not yet divulged.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1890.

CONSERVATIVE STATESMEN.

The Conservative party in Canada has always been strong in ability, and in commenting on this the Empire says:—It is not many years since a Canadian writer dealing with the life and actions of Sir John Macdonald referred to his "enlightened principles of Conservative progress," and in this thought will be found the true cause of the continual accession to that party of the ablest men in our political life—a broad and patriotic policy which deals with great national issues and leaves the promotion of mere partisanship to the oft-times willing appreciation of its opponents, must in the course of time draw to its support the best minds of the country. It is this consciousness of the existence of rare ability upon the Conservative side of the House of Commons as well as in the ranks of the Ministry which has added so greatly to the genuine confidence felt by the great mass of our people in the present Government. By virtue of long experience, unequalled popularity and unrivalled tactical skill Sir John Macdonald holds, and must continue to hold, the first place in the hearts of the Canadian people; but with him in administration, in debate, in the fields of parliamentary eloquence, invective or logic, are to be found many master minds.

Men of the pure, incisive eloquence of Sir John Thompson, or with the earnest, patriotic fervor of Mr. Chapleau or Mr. Foster, are rarely met with, even in that peer of parliaments, the British House of Commons, while the value of the administrative skill and energy which characterize Sir H. Langevin, Hon. Messrs. Bowell, Carling, and the other members of the Government can hardly be over-estimated in considering the importance to the people at large of having such a ministry at the head of its affairs. In reviewing the merits of our public men it should be remembered that only the experience and responsibilities of office are needed to elevate many of the now rising members of the Conservative side of the House into the front rank of contemporary statesmen. Elsewhere, we see the immense energy and powerful eloquence of Sir Charles Tupper being cultivated and developed by wide experience and constant contact with great minds and leaders of public opinion in the Mother Country to a degree which may well render Canada proud of her able representative at the Imperial centre.

In the Senate the matured political wisdom and broad commercial intelligence of the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott is daily developing popular respect and esteem. On the other side of the House what do we find? Nothing but the airy eloquence of Mr. Laurier, unsupported by political weight; the caustic and critical style of the best-hated man in Canadian politics, Sir Richard Cartwright, and the admittedly heavy eloquence of Mr. Blake. Of the latter, it may be well said in the famous lines once applied to Burke:

> Fraught with all learning
> He stood straining his throat
> To persuade Tommy Townsend
> To lend him a vote.

So long as the Conservative party possesses a policy which appeals to the higher and wider sympathies of our people; a policy which develops our vast resources for the use of our own population and inculcates sentiments as broad and generous as are the sweeping prairies of our great Northwest, or the boundless domains of our glorious empire, so long will the Conservative party have a never-failing succession of able statesmen to lead its fortunes and mould the destinies of what is bound to be in their hands a great and prosperous country.

SOUTH MONAGHAN NEWS.

Correspondence of the Review.

VACATION.—Mr. Eli Sager was at Fraserville for a week on a vacation. He then went to Centreville, where he met in with a friend by the name of Mr. W. H. S. Martin. We trust they have had a pleasant time during this hot weather. The above will explain to Mr. Sager's many customers in Peterborough why he was not present on Saturday.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Marshall Wilson, of this township, has had a very severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism. We are sorry to announce he is not altogether better yet. We are confident our friend would like to be out harvesting the golden grain.

BREVITIES.—The Hall Bros. have been shingling some of their outside buildings. So has Mr. Geo. Fair near Centreville...... Mr. Thos. Donaldson has lately purchased two bee hives from Mr. David Wood. We wish Thomas success....We learn that Master Willie Evans, from Little Falls, N. Y., is visiting his friends in North Monaghan....Mr. J. Baptie was seen passing through here with his celebrated horse—Boxer.....There was the appearance of a very heavy thunder storm here on July 31st, but fortunately it broke and was not very severe, although there was enough rain fell to darken the barley.

ROMANCE OF MARRIAGE.

GREAT MEN WHO HATED OR LOVED THEIR WIVES.

Southey Had to Borrow the Ring and the Money for His Wedding—The Thorn Tree Planted by Request on Pretty Lady Cornwallis' Grave.

To count no man happy till he was dead was a maxim of the ancients. To count no man happy till you have examined into his married life may also have an element of practical wisdom in a world in which matrimonial mistakes are so common, and so commonly disastrous. Every one can read off a list of famous men who have notoriously been unhappy in domestic life. Among the married who secured happiness we find at least a few men of the first rank. Dr. Arnold leads the list; and the picture of him is one we are all more or less familiar with from the writings of Dean Stanley.

Lord Beaconsfield did not place his personal happiness in love and domestic joys. He was poor and his wife made him rich; he was ambitious of politics and his wife opened the door of success; he was ambitious of success in his career, and his wife sympathized keenly with him, and at least did not hamper him. He was grateful, he was faithful, he was kind, he was everything that a gentleman ought to be in such a case to a woman who really loved him; but perhaps his condition of mind was not, after all, happiness. Writing to his sister in 1839 he said: "As for 'love,' all my friends who married for love and beauty are either beating their wives or living apart from them. This is literally the case. I may commit many follies in life, but I never intend to marry for love, which, I am sure is a guarantee of infelicity." He was not favorably impressed by Mrs. Lewis when he met her the first time. "I was introduced, by particular desire, to Mrs. Wyndham Lewis, a pretty little woman, a flirt and a rattle; indeed gifted with a volubility I should think unequalled and of which I can convey no idea. She told me she liked silent, melancholy men! I answered that 'I had no doubt of it.'" Yet he was to marry her, and to find in her society a life of success and of high content at least. On April 13, 1867, when he defeated Mr. Gladstone's amendment to the reform bill, the younger members of the party extemporized a supper at the Carlton and begged of him to join them. But, as Lady Beaconsfield was never tired of repeating, "Dizzy came home to me." And she would add how he ate half the raised pie and drank the whole of the bottle of champagne which she had prepared in anticipation of his triumph. She was truly proud of him; and he was fond of telling her in joke that he had married her for her money, to which she would reply: "Ah, but if you had to do it over again you would do it for love"—a statement to which he always smilingly assented. Indeed he never lost an opportunity of eulogizing his wife in public, and on one occasion at a harvest home at Hughenden he spoke of her as "the best wife in England."

In dealing with the romance of marriage it was impossible, of course, to omit the story of Lady Sarah Lennox and George III. No doubt at all, if George had had his own way he would have made Lady Sarah his queen. He used to ride past the house in which she lived every day, and during the harvest Lady Sarah was often to be seen making hay on the lawn in a bewitching costume. When the king finally married the German princess, Lady Sarah was one of the bridesmaids. On this occasion an old nobleman, who had not been to court since the accession of the house of Hanover, paid his respects to the king. He was very old and almost blind, but struck by the beauty of Lady Sarah, and mistaking her for the queen, he plumped down on his honest old Jacobite knees to kiss her hand! Lady Sarah, very much confused, bade him rise, saying, "I am not the queen, sir." George Selwyn said of the old nobleman: "He was always partial to pretenders," a slap at Lady Sarah which deserved revenge.

Two of the remarkable men of the last century were unfortunate in their love affairs. Gen. Wolfe was rejected in his first love affair, and, as every one knows, he was killed before he married Miss Lowther, to whom he was engaged, and who subsequently married some one else.

Lord Cornwallis made a love-match, but his wife was so much attached to him and so grief-stricken at his absence during such long periods, that she fell into a jaundice and died a few weeks after her husband had flung up his command and come home to see her. She directed that a thorn tree should be planted over her grave and that her name should not be graven upon the headstone. It was after her death that Lord Cornwallis returned to service in America, the end of which was also, for him, melancholy enough.

We read with a good deal of amusement of the romantic and passionate attachment of young Grote, afterwards the historian of Greece, for Harriet Lewin, who is described in his letters as being, of course, very lovely; but who, in after days at least, was eccentric, strong featured and masculine.

Among the runaway matches mentioned is that of Henry Fox, the first Lord Holland. He fell in love with Lady Charlotte Lennox, and, being refused by the family, ran away with the lady. But his subsequent career fully justified the rashness of his action; for he certainly showed that he knew how to make money and to keep it, till Charles Fox, his son cultivated in him the faculty of giving it away. John Scott, afterwards Lord Eldon, also ran away with his wife at a very early age. The window from which Bessie Surtees descended into her lover's arms is still pointed out to every visitor to Newcastle as he passes before the old house—the home of the wealthy banker, her father, in Sandhill not 500 yards from the great suspension bridge that spans the Tyne." In his old age Lord Eldon used to tell how piteous was their condition. On the third morning after the union our funds were exhausted; we had not a home to go to, and we knew not whether our friends would ever speak to us again." One of his earliest legal experiences was in reading, as substitute, the Vinerian law lecture. "I began," he says, "without knowing a single word that was in it. It was upon the statute of young men running away with maidens." Fancy me reading with about 150 boys and young men all giggling at the professor. Such a tittering audience no one ever had." The scanty means of the young people had an unpleasant effect. They developed in the pretty young bride habits of thrift which hardened into extreme parsimony. She was also very averse to society, for the runaway marriage made her delicately sensitive about society in the beginning and at last it became distasteful to her. Curiously enough, their eldest daughter married without the consent of her parents.

The story of Southey's love and marriage can never be absent from such a compilation of this sort. No man ever had less right to get married than Southey. He had no money no profession, no reputation, no place in the world, and, more than this, he was dependent on his friend Cottle who had been supplying him with money. Cottle had to supply him even with the ring and the money for the wedding. After that beginning he lived a long life of anxious, earnest literary labor, earning not much, winning no great fame, but leaving behind him a memory rich in every sort of private virtue and worth. No doubt his wife, both as a bride and during all her life, had much the heaviest part of the daily burden to bear. She bore it nobly, and died, indeed a martyr to duty towards her husband and her children, her last days being clouded by mental troubles which caused her to be secluded. Forty years had they been married when Edith died. Southey's own life was not to be long and his latest days were also passed in a gentle mental alienation which continued till he died.

The list of the "unhappily married" is large and brilliant; it includes William Beckford, the author of "Vathek," who, however, does not seem to have deserved a happy life, and whose enormous fortune and great talents were alike wasted; Lady Blessington, who from being the widow of a penniless officer, blazed as Lady Blessington over London society, fizzled out again after Lord Blessington's death, and had a fitful splendor once more as leader of a quasi literary coterie, and finally smashed up and went away to Paris where she died suddenly. She and Count D'Orsay led a sort of matrimonial partnership for some years, until the smash up took place in London. Lord Bolingbroke is also quoted with propriety, as an example of unhappy domestic experiences. In his case, however, the faults were all on his side. He was absolutely without morality and almost without decency, for he bragged to his wife of his early amours and successes till she was forced, in self-defence, to close his mouth with an effective sarcasm. Lord Lytton in our own time was also unhappily, though romantically married; and a large part at least of the subsequent misery was due to his temper and conduct. But perhaps full justice has not been done to the ill effects of the long and hard struggle with poverty which he maintained with such success, but with such constant labor during many years.

Among the disappointed men of genius may be mentioned Buckle the historian of civilization; Henry Fielding the novelist; Edward Gibbon, the historian; Lord Mansfield, and, in early life, John Wesley. The case of Gibbon has some satirical features. He fell in love with Mlle. Curchod, at Lausanne, Switzerland, and "she listened," he says, "to the voice of truth and passion; and I might presume to hope that I had made some impression on a virtuous heart." But on his return to England he found that his father would not consent to the match. "After a painful struggle," he says, "I yielded to my fate; I sighed as a lover; I obeyed as a son." It may be difficult to decide without a doubt whether his obedience was due to filial piety or to weak nerves and a feeble pulsation. The lady did quite as well, for she married a distinguished man. Gibbon remained single all his life and devoted his time to his history, finishing it at Lausanne, the scene of his youthful attachment. Charles Fox's private life was made somewhat objectionable by his having as his wife a Mrs. Ormistead, to whom he was not married for many years, though finally they were united legally. The marquis of Wellesley also made a mistake that lasted many years in marrying a Frenchwoman who had been his wife in name only for a long time. No doubt it was the right thing to do; but these right things are done so late that they almost cease to be right, and the misery they inflict is always lasting and real. —Montreal Gazette.

RACING BULLOCKS IN INDIA.

They Are Speedy, but Can't be Taught to Run in Straight Lines.

In India the favorite animals, both for speed and for indurance, are the native bullocks. The animals are small, wiry, muscular, and swift. They are trained to race and run well, not only under the saddle, but in harness. The Indians are fond of racing their beasts, and the sport is encouraged by the English part of the population.

The animal is guided by a cord through the nose, but the driver places more reliance on whip and voice than on the cord. The Indians are natural gamblers, and will bet their last rupee on the result of a race, taking so much interest in it that a penniless native has been known to wager his liberty and that of his family for an entire year, and sell himself into voluntary slavery as the result of losing a bet. The races are frequently attended by serious accidents, from the fact that, although the bullocks may be trained to great swiftness, it seems almost impossible to teach them to run in a straight line. They will bunch together, and thus frequently smash one or more of the vehicles.

Exciting as are the bullock races when the beasts are harnessed and driven by native drivers, they are far more so when the bullocks are ridden by European soldiers or sailors. The chief danger in a race of this description lies in the falls which are the almost inevitable result of an attempt to ride these awkward animals.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Proverbs of the Sea.

The sea refuses no river.
The ocean is made of small drops.
It is a great way to the bottom of the sea.
It is but a stone's throw to the bottom of the sea.
He that would sail without danger must never come on the main sea.
He sets his sail to every wind.
Hoist your sail when the wind is fair.
Being at sea, sail; being on land, settle.
He who goes to sea must sail or sink.
It is easy to sail with the wind and tide.
A big ship needs deep water.
A mariner must have his eyes on the rocks and sand as well as the North Star.
He that will not sail till all dangers are over will never put to sea.
He that will not sail till he have fair wind will lose many a voyage.
Many grains of sand will sink a ship.
Better lose an anchor than a ship.
With broken rudder the vessel is soon lost.
He who can steer need not row.
The first in the boat can choose his oar.
Ill goes the boat without oars.
To have an oar in every man's barge.
Good riding at two anchors men have told.
For if one fail the other will hold.
Do not trust all in the same boat.
Too many sailors will sink a ship.
Ships fear fire more than water.
To cast water in the sea.
He cannot find water in the sea.
He seeks water in the sea.
Helping the unworthy is throwing water in the sea.
As true as the sea burns.
As welcome as water in a leaky ship.
The water that supports the ship is the same that sinks it.
Large fish live in deep waters.
By the small boat one reaches the ship.
Who embarks with the devil must sail with him.
The soul is the ship, the mind is the rudder, the thoughts are the oars and truth is the port.
Women are ships, and must be manned.
A ship and a woman always want trimming.
A ship and a woman are always repairing.
Give a woman luck and cast her into the sea.
Who won't be ruled by rudder must be ruled by rock.—American Notes and Queries.

CUT HIS THROAT WITH A RAZOR.

Even the Ingenious Medical Student Couldn't Save His Life.

GRAVENHURST, Aug. 2.—A. Q. Bethune, who has been running a sort of shebeen, called the Dew Drop, about two miles from here on the Muskoka-road, has lived a drunken life for many years. His supply of liquor failing and being also very sick, he committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor while in bed yesterday morning. He lived for about six hours, although he had completely severed the wind-pipe. The doctor not having a silver tube, nothing could be done for the man to breathe through till an ingenious medical student, who had accompanied the doctor, suggested breaking off the neck of a castor oil bottle, which was used till a proper tube could be procured.

A License Transferred.

The License Commissioners for West Peterborough held a meeting yesterday afternoon, at which the license of the hotel at Lakefield of which Capt. Dion was proprietor was transferred to Mr. Wm. Leahy, formerly of the Balmoral hotel in town.

To the Northwest.

The Canadian Pacific railway will run harvest excursions at cheap rates to the Northwest on Aug. 12th. 19th and Sept. 2nd, as will be seen by advertisement. These colonist excursions will leave all points in Ontario—Sharbot Lake, Kingston and west thereof. Particulars may be obtained from the station or ticket agents.

The Rule of the Road.

Police Magistrate Deacon writes to the Lindsay papers calling attention to the fact that the law of the road has been amended by adding thereto the following:—"Any person so overtaking another vehicle or horseman shall turn out to the left so far as may be necessary to avoid a collision with the vehicle or horseman so overtaken, and the person so overtaken shall not be required to leave more than one half of the road free." This act came into force on the 1st day of August.

Who Bids ?

The Lindsay Warder says:—"A gentleman, a wealthy farmer in Mariposa, wants to secure the service of a good housekeeper to whom a liberal salary will be paid yearly. Or, he being an attractive widower, should any charming and accomplished lady wish to become Mrs.—by the way it would scarcely do to state the name—why the opportunity may be presented. Applications for the housekeeper will be received by the editor of The Warder. For the higher position consultation must be had with the gentleman interested."

Blocking the Sidewalk.

For some hours Thursday part of the sidewalk on George-st., between Simcoe and Charlotte; was blocked by the extensive stock of ale being brought in by W. J. Morrow. Several complaints were made, but Mr. Morrow after securing a large staff had it removed. The stock consists principally of the celebrated White Label, and the number of cars that have come to his address these few months past speaks volumes for the ale. d27w31

Almost Swamped.

The Stirling News-Argus says:—"On Wednesday night of last week a party of tourists from Toronto had quite an adventure on Crow Lake. The party left Blairton in the evening for Marmora, but when half way down Crow Lake a severe storm overtook them, and they were drenched to the skin and their boat nearly swamped. However, they managed to reach the camp near Marmora about 10 o'clock, where they were hospitably entertained by the campers. Rev. Dr. Dewart, editor of the Christian Guardian, who was one of the party, was comfortably lodged in the tent of Mr. F. B. Parker, of this place, and although the venerable gentleman is well up in years, he appeared none the worse for the thorough wetting he received."

Koh-i-noor ! Koh-i-noor !

Every brand of tea has its own peculiarities. So to get a perfect Tea, you can only do so by blending these different kinds in proportion, that by so doing the one flavor benefits the other. This being the case, how is it possible to obtain such perfection? Only by a long practical experience and having at your disposal large quantities of the several Brands to operate with. Such are the conditions by which the Tea is introduced for the first time to the Canadian public under the name and brand of Koh-i-nur. This Tea has been carefully blended by those who have been engaged, and have had a life's experience, in the trade. For sale at Hawley Bros. tea store. d18w30

Kidd the Shoe man gives advice,
Whether hot or making ice,
Keep beneath your soles a shoe
Durable and comely too.
Some great man has said what's shocking,
"Its a poor leg that won't shape its stocking,"
Kidd's Shoes are shapely, easy, nice,
And then consider—such a price,
Moderate, and low enough,
Goods that wear, for sure they're tough.
Kidd the Shoe Man gives advice,
Buy from him, you'll save the price
Almost in a week or two,
On the shoes you're wearing through.

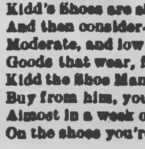
Historic Ground for Sightseers.



Canada has a history Part of it—the history—centres in the land around Niagara Falls. Long before Barnum was born battles were fought and decided within gunshot of the cataract. Thousands of people have read of these exploits, but never saw the locality. Here's the chance. Go with Court Little John Foresters' excursion on Civic Holiday. Quick trip per C. P. R. and big steamers from Toronto. Plenty of time to see the Falls and battle grounds. 2 days for the return trip. 3 days to go to Buffalo. Fare exceedingly low. Look up the posters for full particulars and watch for further items in the paper. 1d26

A Month in Gaol.

Arthur Cheshire, who was arrested in Toronto and brought down by Chief Rozel, was charged with maliciously injuring property in the Times office. Cheshire, who is a young fellow, had been employed in the Times office as pressman, and after he left a roller was found cut and the press out of gear. Mr. G. W. Hatton appeared for the prosecution and Mr. R. M. Dennistoun for Cheshire. The prisoner pleaded guilty to cutting the roller, but denied injuring the press. Mr. Dennistoun made a plea for leniency on behalf of the boy and said the prosecution did not wish to press the charge unduly. The Magistrate heard the evidence of Mr. Robertson and of Thos. Duncan, the present pressman at the office, and imposed a fine of $5 and $5 damages and costs or one month in gaol. The costs amounted to $25. The prisoner did not pay the $25 and was committed.

DROWNED IN STONY LAKE.

Rev. Mr. Baughman, of Bowmanville, Perishes in the Water.

A sad fatality occured at Stony lake yesterday when Rev. F. W. Baughman, pastor of the Christian church, Bowmanville, lost his life while bathing. Mr. Baughman and his wife and Mr. J. B. Fuller and family, of Toronto, were camped on an island at the mouth of Eel's creek, near Mr. Grubbe's cottage. Mr. Fuller had gone for water, and Mr. Baughman said to his wife that he would go and

TAKE A PLUNGE.

He was an excellent swimmer, and had given proof of it while on the lake. On the previous day the fish line had caught on a stump in the lake and he dove down and set it free. Yesterday he went to a point where the rock slopes a little into the water and then goes straight down about twenty feet. He was dressed in a bathing suit and played about in the water. Mr. Fuller's little girl was there and he told her to come out and he would teach her how to swim. Following his directions the little girl placed her arms on his shoulders and he swam about with her, to the amusement of herself and those on the shore. In a few minutes Mr. Baughman made for the shore and gave the child a shove in the water towards the rock, calling to those on shore to catch her. A young lady caught the child by the hair and drew her up. Mr. Baughman also called to them to HAND HIM A POLE.

A fishing rod was lying at hand and it was reached out to him. He caught it by the end, but it was a jointed pole and when they tried to pull him in it gave way at a joint and the clergyman sank in the water and was drowned. Mrs. Baughman, who was wild with grief, rushed into the water, but was rescued.

Mr. Fuller returned to the place, too late to try to save Mr. Baughman, and at once commenced a search for the unfortunate clergyman's body. He succeeded in finding it and drew it up with a trawling line and hook. The water was twenty-one feet deep where the body was found. The body was brought to Lakefield on the Mary Ellen and taken in charge and prepared for burial by Mr. Chapin, undertaker. This morning it was driven to town and taken on the 6.40 Grand Trunk train to Bowmanville.

Mr. Baughman was a young man 27 or 28 years of age. He had been married less than a year. It is believed that he was seized with cramps in the water, and his body showed signs of the cramps when it was recovered. The sad fatality cast a gloom over those who were near the place and much sympathy was expressed for the young and grief stricken wife of the clergyman.

Interprovincial Cricket.

In the match at Toronto yesterday between the Ontario and Quebec teams the Ontario team made 115 runs in the first and 128 for 9 wickets in the second. Quebec made 96 in the first and had not played the second. Mr. W. F. Hamilton played with the Quebec team and made 2 runs not out.

Back Again.

"Laboring" John Sullivan's familiar face was seen in the Police Court again this morning. The charge was the usual one—having been drunk, and John did not deny its truthfulness although he pleaded to be allowed to go and he "would not been seen there again." He was fined $2 or ten days, and he gave a sigh as he said, "I have no money."

A Young Man Shot.

A young man from Parkdale, Mr. Frank Nicholson, passed through here on his way home yesterday carrying in his body a small rifle bullet. He with some companions were camped on Fish island, near Julieen's, and on Thursday evening two of them were walking through the bush, Nicholson ahead and his comrade carrying a rifle at the trail. By some means, through a twig catching the rifle or some such way, the gun was fired and the bullet struck Nicholson on the hip, giving him a severe wound. A search was made for a physician, but there seemed to be none on the lake at the time and at about ten o'clock at night Mr. T. W. Robinson and another started from Mr. Robinsons store on Juniper island to paddle him to Lakefield and they reached that village in three hours. Dr. D. Fraser probed the wound for the ball, but did not find it and advised the young man to go home. He was driven to town and took the early Canadian Pacific train for Toronto. The ball had penetrated deeply, but the wound was not very painful, although complications might arise from it

The Civic Deputation.

Councillors Langford, Davidson and Cahill and Mr. J. E. Belcher, C.E., the civic deputation who went to Montreal and Brockville to get points on sewerage construction, returned this morning. At Montreal two sewers were being constructed. One on St. Catherine-st. was a large one, with brick walls two brick thick and flat bottom. A stationary engine was used to propel buckets along on rollers, and as the full buckets were moved away empty ones took their places and the work went steadily on, the brickwork following close up to the excavation. The St. Paul-st. sewer was smaller, with walls one brick thick and a tile bottom. At Brockville the Mayor, commissioners and engineer drove the deputation around the town. The main sewer at that town is from 16 to 18 inches. It is constructed on the separate system, a tile drain being laid along beside the sewer to drain the streets, and it gives satisfaction there. Flushing tanks are used, which are filled from the street main and work automatically, and the sewers are thus kept well flushed. A large iron pipe carries the sewerage 1,000 feet into the lake. Stringent rules have been enforced in Brockville regarding the plumbing of houses. At Montreal particular attention was paid to traps, a good trap being needed here. The deputation received some good points regarding sewerage, and they will apply that knowledge to the subject here.

—Mrs. C. Britton, of Lindsay, went into the woods at Sturgeon Point to gather flowers. While crossing a fence she fell and was stunned; and when recovered somewhat was too weak to walk and was not discovered by the searchers who went to look for her until one o'clock in the morning.

—The house of Mr. John Kells, of Lindsay, was struck by lightning last week. It descended into Mr. Kell's bedroom, following the stove pipes, splitting them and throwing the soot all about the room. From the bedroom it passed down to the parlor beneath and jumped to the metal cornice running around the wall, upon which it evidently pirouetted for some time, smashing an occasional picture as it went the round. Next the unwelcome visitor descended to the window, and after playing for a time with the metal knobs and fixtures about the curtain rollers it made its exit through the open window, much to the relief of Mr. Kells, who was watching its gyrations from the head of the stairway.

CHIGNECTO SHIP RAILWAY.

A Description of This Most Stupendous Undertaking.

A correspondent who recently returned from along the Chignecto ship railway says: "No work on the continent at present under construction is so universally attracting the attention of the various clever correspondents of the scientific press and these keen-eyed purveyors of mechanical intelligence are often in the vicinity of the ship railway gazing upon the mammoth steam shovels that dig out the docks with wonderful rapidity, or watching the extensive cuttings and the preparations for the placing of the stupendous hydraulic lifts that will raise the argosies of commerce to their positions on the rails when the railway becomes a completed work. The Chignecto ship railway, while being constructed, gives employment to an army of workmen in the cuttings at the stone quarries and at the terminus of the work at Fort Lawrence, on the Chignecto basin, and Tidnish, on the Northumberland strait. Speculations as to its utility when completed are of course rife among nautical men, and among less interested men, but a work that, when completed, will cost anywhere from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 is not likely to be a mere visionary experiment. Your correspondent has heard it stated on good authority that when the ship railway becomes a finished work its facilities for the transportation of ships of every class across the Cumberland isthmus will be absolutely available for safe carriage of ships and their cargoes. This is what it is being built for, and it must be a source of pardonable gratification to its promoter, Mr. Ketchum, that his carefully prepared plans and scientific investigations of the magnificent possibilities of this stupendous work were so convincing to the leading capitalists of England as to cause them to put up, as wanted, all or most of the cash required in its construction. The somewhat bewildering amount of plant already in sight along the entire 17½ miles of the work, the almost mountainous masses of granite and freestone being piled on both docks for their lining and solidity, the huge combination in iron and steel that at Fort Tidnish, Port Elgin and other points await the skilful adjustment of the competent engineers, the powerful machinery at the dock, the whirl and enginery of swift mechanical movement, the dull thud of the explosion of dynamite in the hitherto hidden recesses of mother earth, all convey to the interested beholder a partial conception of the vast amount of work required in the construction of this mammoth undertaking. Double docked at both ends of the line, double tracked its entire length and with the waters of Chignecto and Northumberland deepened for the safe anchorage of vessels for miles that are waiting for transport, and you have in this hastily wrought description a fair idea of what a work this will be."

KNOW HOW
—TO—
KEEP COOL !

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the prob.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"You do not mean—oh !"

It was a deep, painful groan, and the fair girl clasped her hands towards the man before her.

"Hold," he said, almost sternly. "I am not trifling now. I am not only serious, but firm in purpose. When you were placed under my charge your father bade me do as I would; and now I would make you my wife. The Count Damonoff was the first who came for your hand, and had he been a proper man, and had you loved him, I should have interposed no objections; but you did not love him, and that affair is past. Now I lay my claim upon you, and my fortune and title I lay at your feet."

"And what is to become of my estate?" the maiden asked, quickly and meaningly, for the thought flashed upon her.

"Why—we'll have the two united," returned the duke, with some hesitation.

"No, no," Rosalind cried; "you will not do this. Oh, spare me from such a fate !"

"Spare thee, girl? Spare thee from becoming the wife of one of the most powerful noblemen in the empire? You must be crazy."

"My guardian," spoke the fair girl, now looking her companion steadily in the face, "you only do this to try me. When you know that such a union would make me miserable forever—when you know it would cast out all the joys of life, and extinguish the last hope of peace from my soul, you surely will not press it."

"Rosalind Valdai, I have resolved that you should be my wife. Mind you, this is one of the firm, fixed purposes of my soul; and those who know the Duke of Tula best know that he never gives up a purpose once fixed in his mind. You cannot mistake me now."

Slowly the stern fact dawned upon Rosalind's mind. There had been a lingering hope that he might be only trying her to see if she loved him, or if she would willingly become his wife. Awhile she remained with her head bowed, and her bosom heaving with the wild emotion thus called up; but at length she looked up and spoke.

"Sir," she said, faintly, but with marked decision, "you can not make me your wife."

"Ah?—and why not?"

"Because I will never consent."

"Ah—say you so?"

"I do—and I mean it."

"Ha, ha, ha,—you know little of my power if you think you can thwart me in my purpose. I tell thee, as sure as the God of heaven lives, you shall be my wife."

"No, no. Before heaven I protest against such unholy union. You can not have my heart, and such union would be but foul mockery."

"Oho—now you come to the point. I can't have your heart, eh? Perhaps your heart is given to the gun-maker?"

Rosalind's eyes flashed in an instant. The words of the duke were spoken sneeringly and contemptuously, and they jarred upon the young girl's soul.

"Aye," she quickly uttered, and boldly, too, "I do love Ruric Nevel; and he is worthy of my love."

"Now, my pretty ward," resumed Olga, in a tone of peculiar irony, "you have spoken as I hoped you would speak—plainly and to the point; so I can answer just as plainly. Know, then, that Ruric Nevel can never be your husband. He stands charged with a horrid crime, and the Emperor only waits to see whether the count recovers or not ere he awards the punishment. The gun-maker is forbidden, on pain of death, to leave the city. So you may cast him from your thoughts as soon as possible."

"What crime is Ruric accused of?" the maiden asked.

"Of murder."

"In wounding the count?"

"Yes."

"Oh, how can you bring your tongue to such speech ! You know the noble youth was not to blame in this affair. He was—"

"Hold, Rosalind. I want no argument on this question. You have heard what I have said, and be assured that I mean it. I had hoped you would receive my proposal with more favor; but I did not enter into the plan until my mind was all made up, and the thing all fixed. You will become my wife within one month !"

"I will flee to the Emperor," gasped Rosalind.

"You will not leave this palace again until you are the Duchess of Tula !"

"I will never speak the word that is necessary to make me your wife—never ! At the altar, if you be by my side, my lips shall be sealed, and no power on earth shall loose them !"

"Do you mean this?" whispered the duke.

"As God lives, I do."

"Then mark me": the stout, dark nobleman gazed fixedly into the maiden's face as he spoke, and in his look and tone there was a fiendish expression that could not be mistaken—"I shall do all in my power to make you my lawful wife—if you refuse me you shall be beaten with the knout in the market-place, where all may see the ungrateful girl who refused the heart and hand of the noble Duke of Tula. Ay! and after thou art beaten thou shalt be cast into the streets for dogs to bark at. Dost hear me, Rosalind Valdai?"

With one deep, soul-dying moan, the poor girl sank down shivering and pale. The duke caught her as she fell, and having laid her senseless form back upon the couch, he strode from the apartment.

CHAPTER IX.

It was early evening ere Zenobie entered the apartment of her young mistress. As she opened the door she found all dark within. She moved into the room, and shading her candle with her hand she gazed about. The wind still howled fearfully without, and the snow came drifting against the windows. When the girl had reached the extremity of the place she called her mistress's name, and she was answered by a low groan from the couch in the corner. Thither she hastened, and there she found her mistress.

"Rosalind — my mistress !" she cried kneeling down.

"Who is it?" the maiden asked, starting up, and gazing frantically around.

"It is me, Zenobie. Say, my dear, good mistress—what is it? What is the matter? What has happened?"

With a quick movement Rosalind put her attendant away and sat up; and having gazed about her for some moments she murmured:

"Where am I? who is here?"

"It is I. You are in your own chamber. Come—you are cold here."

Without resistance the maiden suffered herself to be led to the place where the heated air came up from the furnace below, and there she sat down.

"What is it?" again asked Zenobie, eagerly. "What has happened?"

Rosalind bowed her head upon her hands and after some moments of thought she looked up. She was very pale, and a fearful tremor shook her frame.

"Zenobie," she uttered, in a low, strange whisper. "Ask me no more now. I am not well. Oh, ask me no more now."

"My mistress," returned the faithful girl, placing one arm about Rosalind's neck, "you know what you may tell me, and what you may not; but whom will you trust if you trust not me? Oh, give me your love, and if can serve you let me do so."

"I would trust you with life itself," the maiden returned; "and some time you shall know all that has happened here; but not now—not now. Oh, I can not speak it now !"

To be continued.

THE PULSE OF TRADE.

No Special Gains Reported to Bradstreet's This Week.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Special telegrams to Bradstreet's show no special gains within a week though there is some variation in conditions. The wheat crop has not improved any. Indian corn has lost headway owing to dry weather in Eastern Kansas and Nebraska, where rain is badly needed, but rice promises the largest crop on record, and cotton crop advices are quite favorable. Our own crop advices from Eastern Kansas yesterday are, in brief, as compared with one year ago: Potatoes one-fifth, Indian corn one-fourth, wheat not quite one-half. Corn and oats are worth twice last year's prices at primary markets; wheat, flour and tame hay one-quarter more, and potatoes three times as much. Rain would help corn and potatoes and double the bean crop. Weather very warm, poor prospects for rain, prices advancing.

The Monetary Outlook.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Dun, Wiman & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade will say: Heavy exports of gold, $4,000,000, having been engaged for Saturday and the advance of the Bank of England rate from 4 per cent. have altered the monetary outlook for the present. Large realizing sales by foreign holders of securities materially appeared and caused weakness in stocks, notwithstanding the agreement of western trunk lines upon advanced rates for live stock, dressed beef and provisions. The Treasury circular inviting offers to sell silver bullion has been issued and the price has been rapidly advanced to 50-56 pence at London, though of late there have been large exports from this country. As the new supply of silver notes is the chief reliance at present to compensate for the outgoes of gold, the offers and the action of the Treasury upon them will be awaited with interest. On account of the South American disturbances the demand for gold is likely to continue, and the state of foreign trade is not such at present as to promise an early arrest of the movement. Prices of commodities tend steadily upward, with the expectation of abundant money, and have risen half of one per cent. during the week and this movement, if prolonged, will tend to cause shipments of gold instead of products. At almost all the interior money markets, as here, the rates have been moderate thus far and the supply ample, however, and reports of slow collection, though a little more frequent than of late, are comparatively rare. The accounts of trade are almost uniformly satisfactory. For the midsummer season the state of business is better than usual. The iron business appears rather more confident, though no change can be observed in prices. The wool manufacture changes but little; the tone is not satisfactory. The boot and shoe business shows no weakness, both leather and hides being firm and higher in price. Fears of injury to wheat and corn are caused by numerous reports from the central Western States, though estimates of a yield of 100,000,000 bushels of wheat in the Dakotas and Minnesota appear well supported by detailed railway reports. The conflicting local accounts and estimates helped speculation to a sharp advance in corn and wheat, but in both reaction has since appeared and wheat closes 3½c lower than a week ago, corn about 3c higher, and oats unchanged. Heavy western packing causes some weakness in pork products, and the fine crop reports from the south help to lower cotton a shade.

In general the speculative markets show the influence of anticipated currency expansion, but reaction would be natural if outgoes of gold at the rate of $4,000,000 in a week should continue to overbalance expected purchases of silver at the rate of 4,500,000 ounces in a month. For some time to come the monetary outlook will therefore be watched.

GEN. RIVAS SHOT.

San Salvador's Traitor Captured and Executed - Hundreds Shot.

LALIBERTAD, Aug. 1.—The news of the defeat of Rivas by Government troops under General Antonio Ezeta is confirmed. Rivas escaped from the capital last night but was pursued and taken prisoner a few miles outside the city this morning. He was publicly shot in the back and his corpse was exposed on the plaza Armas. It is reported many prominent persons are compromised and a strict enquiry is being made regarding the Rivas conspiracy. The siege lasted 40 hours. The Capital suffered considerable damage. Hundreds of men were shot dead on the streets. The Government forces who took part in the overthrow of Rivas can now return to the frontier if necessary.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The Times' Buenos Ayres special says: The situation here is unimproved. National and other banks are taking advantage of the law, postponing payments and will cash only the smallest bills. The financial crisis may force Celman's friends to forcibly compel him to resign.

BUENOS AYRES, Aug. 1.—The people are greatly discontented with the agreement of the revolutionists with the Government according to which they abandoned their arms. Some citizens and soldiers have even committed suicide.

A Substitute for the Sea Shore.

Mr. Greengrocer—"Are you going to the sea shore this summer, Mrs. Brown Stone?"

Mrs. Brown-Stone—"I think not."

"I thought you said the children enjoyed playing in the sand so much?"

"So I did. I'll let them come over and play in your sugar occasionally. I guess that will do as well."—Yonkers Statesman.

Female typewriters abound in Washington, and find their profession very lucrative. One of them refused a $1,200 clerkship the other day because she could earn more with her machine.

Skin Diseases

Itching, Burning, Scaly, Crusted, Pimply and Blotchy Cured by the Cuticura Remedies.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONIAL.

About two years ago I was attacked with an inflammatory disease on my face (petyriasis), which was very troublesome, being extremely itchy and painful, giving rise to the production of small bran-like scales. My general health was affected by it. I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT, CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP according to directions, and experienced a change from the very first day; they worked wonderfully and by their continued used for about five months I was completely cured. I have unbounded faith in the CUTICURA REMEDIES. I regard the CUTICURA RESOLVENT as the very best blood purifier; a trial will convince anyone. The CUTICURA SOAP is the best in the market, and cheap at twice its present price. I shall use no other for the toilet and bath. With the prevalence of skin diseases among us as a people (and they are the most difficult to deal with), I regard the CUTICURA REMEDIES of more important and intrinsic value to the world than any other medicine now before the public. I am, with deep gratitude,
(Rev.) WM. CHEELMAN, York Corner, Me.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN TALKS AT BIRMINGHAM.

Lord Stanley, Speaking on the Behring Sea Dispute, Says British Subjects Must and Will be Protected the World Over—Cholera's Ravages.

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 3.—Joseph Chamberlain in a speech here last night said the Government had made a tactical mistake in introducing the Licensing bill during a session crowded with business. The intentions of the Government were good and their proposals were reasonable and beneficent and the Government had been balked by the unexpected hostility of temperance fanatics and above all by the unexpected development of a party spirit that sought every occasion to damage the Government in power. He questioned the sincerity of the Gladstonians and Parnellites in the stand they had taken on the subject and said he saw nothing to discourage the Unionists. The Government, he asserted, had conducted its administrative work with singular good fortune and success, and said it had raised England's influence higher than it had been for many years. The Opposition did not dare to impugn the foreign policy of the Ministry. He ridiculed Mr. Gladstone for raising a "No Popery" cry regarding the mission of Gen. Simmons.

British Subjects Will Be Protected.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The agitation over the Behring Sea dispute has subsided. Great Britain, having declared her attitude, is apparently not anxious to say any more about the matter. The Times asserts that "Behring Sea, outside the three-mile limit, is just as free to all the world as the English Channel or the Mediterranean; nor can any attempt to restrict that freedom be viewed otherwise than an usurpation of well-established rights." So far as war and rumors of war, nothing more is heard or intimated; but the British squadron, recently gathered at Esquimalt, will remain in the North Pacific, prepared for such action as the American cruisers may give occasion for. It is certain that the Canadian sealers will be protected as long as they keep three miles away from American and Russian territory. "We have no quarrel with the United States," said Lord Stanley of Alderley at a dinner last Thursday evening, "but British subjects must and will be protected the world over in the exercise of their lawful rights." A prominent city merchant in the fur trade said, on the same occasion, that it was an attempt of a company holding an American monopoly to use the American Government for the purpose of compelling Her Majesty's subjects to submit to that monopoly.

Tortured by Turks.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—A special correspondent of The Daily News has succeeded in obtaining admission to the Turkish prison at Uskub, Macedonia, a town of European Turkey. He found that the building contained 149 cells, which were occupied by 1811 prisoners, or over twelve to a cell. As a rule the unfortunate victims are sent there to be confined from one to ten years each, but so great are their sufferings arising from the barbarity of their keepers and the total disregard by the latter of all sanitary laws, that one rarely outlives five years. In one cell, 2¼ yards square, the correspondent discovered nearly a score of poor wretches panting for air and starving for food, having in the way of the latter nothing but bread and water. The greater number were stark naked and chained by the ankle and wrist. As if the jailers were unable to inflict tortures enough on their victims in the dens already described, the correspondent found a series of underground cells, said to be reserved for the worst prisoners, where, reeking in total darkness, were those whom Turkish tyranny had singled out for special barbarity. In order to force confessions, which confessions would have proved useful to those in power, the aid of the ant is called in. These insects are kept in small boxes for the purpose, and 50 of them are placed at one time on the naked body of the prisoner whom it is desired to torture. It is also customary to chain men all day in the scorching sun in such a way that they are unable to move.

Lady Dunlo as Venus.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Belle Bilton, or Lady Dunlo, in an interview confirmed the report that Viscount Dunlo had had an interview with her since the recent decision of the divorce case in her favor. She says that the noble youth seems disposed to "do the proper thing," but that his father refuses to continue his allowance if he lives with his wife. The idea of his supporting her, earning money through his own exertions, is of course not conceivable. There is little prospect of the couple maintaining domestic relations, therefore, until Lord Clancarty dies or undergoes a change of heart. Lady Dunlo declares, nevertheless, that she will never compromise her rights nor relax her efforts to enforce their recognition. She denies the rumor that the Viscount is going on a hunting trip to Africa. Lady Dunlo will make a tour of the provinces, appearing in the character of Venus.

The Sportsman says Lord and Lady Dunlo were reconciled through the efforts of friends. Wertheimer shook hands with Lord Dunlo and occupied a box with the latter and his wife at the theatre Saturday.

Cholera on Portugal's Frontier.

LISBON, Aug. 3.—Cholera has appeared in the Spanish province of Badajos on the Portuguese frontier. A rigorous cordon has been established on the frontier by the Portuguese authorities.

KEMMLER'S LAST WEEK.

THE DATE OF THE EXECUTION NOT YET ASCERTAINED.

No Newspaper Representatives Except the Managers of the United and Associated Press to Be Admitted—No Interference Now Will Avail.

AUBURN, Aug. 2.—As the time for the execution of the murderer Kemmler draws near interest in the case is renewed. Kemmler still takes great pride in his personal appearance and dresses himself with care and deliberation. Of necessity his habits are regular, as everything is done at the prison on time. Since his incarceration he has lived on food from the warden's kitchen and is healthy and robust. In fact, he has never been sick enough to require the attention of Dr. Sawyer, the prison physician, although he was indisposed about a week ago, suffering from a cold and stomach trouble. He has fully recovered from the effects of the cold and Keeper McNaughton says he never was in better health than at present.

Warden Durston said yesterday that he had not seen the condemned man in 10 days and Mrs. Durston had evidently relaxed her labors with him, as she says she has not visited him in several days.

It is probable that the execution will be managed very differently next week than it would have been if the murderer had been electrocuted under his previous sentence. Warden Durston says there will be a change in the personnel of the witnesses and he will take every precaution against the admission of any representative of a newspaper, but personal invitations will probably be sent to Walter P. Philips, manager of the United Press, and William Henry Smith of the Associated Press. These gentlemen will not be permitted to name substitutes, and the scheme arranged by The New York Sun, which would probably have resulted in the admission of two Sun men as representatives of the associations, cannot be worked this time.

Warden Durston says there will not be as much mystery about the affair next week as there was in April, and it is probable that the hour of electrocution will be known by the representatives in advance. It is not probable that the execution will take place before Tuesday and it may not occur until later in the week.

The death-dealing apparatus is not yet in place, in fact it has not been taken from the boxes in which it was brought back from Dannemora Prison, where it was taken to kill Chapleau, the Plattsburgh man, whose sentence was commuted. The work of putting the machinery in position is not much, however, and can be done in a fraction of a day. The execution will take place in the room next to Kemmler's cell.

No Interference Now Will Avail.

ROCHESTER, Aug. 2.—C. R. Barnes, who is to assist Warden Durston in preparing the electric apparatus for the execution of Kemmler, says that the Attorney-General has advised Warden Durston that if the Westinghouse Company enjoins him from using their dynamo for the execution he should give bonds and then go on and use the dynamo. The operators who are to witness the execution are to be invited to appear at the prison on Tuesday morning, but Superintendent Barnes will not tell when the execution is to take place.

No Reprieve Yet Asked For.

ALBANY, Aug. 2.—Many rumors are flying about concerning Gov. Hill's interposition in behalf of Kemmler, but the Governor denies that he has had any interview with Warden Durston or that there has been any recent application for pardon. At the same time it is known that Warden Durston is anxious to see the Governor and it is supposed that a reprieve will be asked for at least.

Wants To Live as Long as Possible.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—The Tribune's Auburn special says: Kemmler passed a quiet Sunday in his cell, eating little and speaking only when spoken to. He has asked to be allowed to live as long as possible and is worrying lest there be any hitch in the working of the electrical apparatus which will cause him torture. There is, however, no danger of this, for the last test showed a tension of 1200 volts. Kemmler has turned against Warden Durston, Mrs. Durston and Keeper McNaughton, whom he formerly liked so well. The impression has got abroad that the execution will take place early Tuesday morning, but the Warden has given no sign that it is true, and most people believe it will not take place till Thursday.

ENGLAND INTERESTED.

A Demand for Reform—Dreadful Execution of a Girl in Madrid.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The subject of the Kemmler execution excites great interest in England, where there is a general demand for the reform of some of the antiquated methods of criminal procedure. At present a prisoner in a capital or any other criminal case is not allowed to testify in his own defence. Mr. Justice Mathew, in opening the Bodmin assizes, said that it was a singular thing that they had been dealing with questions of life and death for centuries without acting on the maxim of hearing both sides. The proposed change would benefit innocent prisoners, and he doubted that it would be of advantage to the guilty. The abolition of the death penalty is also being agitated, but without any prospect of such a radical step, although a more humane method than hanging might be adopted, should experience elsewhere recommend it. English executions have, for some years past, been free from horrible incidents, although death has not always been as swift as might be desired.

Madrid, Spain, was the scene the other day of a sensational execution, a servant girl being put to death in public for the murder of her mistress. About 30,000 persons attended the spectacle, the criminal sitting on a wooden bench before a post, against which the neck was pressed and broken by an iron collar. Perhaps as severe as death itself was the preliminary requirement of Spanish law, by which the convict was shut up for 30 hours before death with friars and priests saying masses and prayers. It is no wonder that the woman was half insensible when taken to the scaffold.

Increasing in Valencia.

MADRID, Aug. 2.—The cholera is increasing in Valencia. Several cases are reported in Llerna in the Province of Badajos. The Portuguese Government has forbidden Spanish trains to cross the frontier until lazarettos have been established on the border line.

400 Deaths in a Day at Mecca.

CAIRO, Aug. 3.—The cholera is increasing at Mecca. Yesterday there were over 400 deaths from the disease.

MECCA, Aug. 3.—Five hundred deaths from cholera were reported here to-day.

Died After 43 Days' Fast.

WINDSOR, Aug. 2.—Mrs. Roderigo Vallimiere of Tecumseh is dead after having fasted 43 days. She took sick in January, and the doctors said she had dyspepsia. She grew worse, and for the last 43 days had refused all food.

FASTED 42 DAYS AND LIVES.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Jacques, the French soldier, has completed his fast of 42 days. He has been on exhibition at the Aquarium during the fast

FATAL RUNAWAY.

A Little Girl Killed and Several People Hurt by a Runaway at Hagersville.

HAGERSVILLE, Aug. 2.—Yesterday at an early hour as Mrs. Lynch, wife of one of our leading merchants, together with her four little girls and her two sisters, the Misses Murphy of Cayuga, were driving into town, from the last named place, the horse, becoming frightened, shied to one side, tipping the carriage over into a deep ditch. The horse, finding himself unable to rise, began to kick. Mrs. Lynch and two of the little girls received several blows about the head. One little girl, Zita, aged 3 years, received a severe kick just over the left eye and died in a few minutes. The rest of the party, although badly shaken up, are in a fair way toward recovery.

Cut Almost in Two, Yet Lived.

GREENSBORO, N.C., Aug. 2.—A negro named Schofield Gault was killed on the Richmond & Danville Railroad here yesterday. His body was cut almost completely in two at the waist, only a shred of muscle holding the two parts together. The wheels of two cars and a tender passed over him, yet when the train stopped he told the hands how to take him out. He was laid on a skid and lived and talked calmly and rationally of his injuries for an hour. Occasionally he would glance at the mutilated parts of his body. The first of his relatives to reach him was his aged grandmother, who dropped dead after looking upon his injuries.

Crushed in a Coal Shaft.

SHENANDOAH, Pa., Aug. 2.—John O. Boyle and Charles Mulhern were killed to-day in the shaft of the Packer colliery. The engineer lowered instead of hoisting the cage, and the miners were crushed in the bottom.

Boy Cut in Two by a Train.

PATERSON, N.J., Aug. 2.—Frank Tamber, aged 15, was cut in two by an Erie train at the River-street crossing in this city to-day. The fatality occurred within a short distance of the spot where five children were run down Tuesday last, three of them being killed. Tamber's death was seen by about 30 persons.

Kicked by a Horse.

DRESDEN, Aug. 3.—Rev. W. J. Connor of the English Church met with a painful accident a few days ago. His horse had broken loose from the stable during the night and was found in the yard in the morning. In attempting to drive the animal in, Mr. Connor raised his hands and at that moment received the full force of a kick in the mouth. A doctor was called at once, and it was found that three teeth were broken out in the upper jaw, and two hanging loose in the lower jaw, which were pushed back. The under lip was cut through, and had to be stitched, while the upper jaw was fractured. The reverend gentleman will be laid up for some time.

The Daily Smash.

HANNIBAL, Mo., Aug. 3.—A crowded passenger coach on the St. Louis & Hannibal Railway was telescoped in a collision with a switch engine yesterday afternoon. The baggage car of the train was driven nearly through the coach. Two colored men, David Summers and Harvey Letcher of New London, were killed outright. Frank Porter, colored, of New London had both legs cut off and has since died. Robert Brothers, brakeman, had both legs broken. Others injured were: John Leeper, Frankford, right arm broken; William Robinson, colored, New London, badly bruised about the head; Miss Allen of New London, severely bruised and injured internally. A number of passengers were slightly injured. The engineer of the switch engine, William Tongate, was arrested immediately after the accident, charged with criminal carelessness. The passenger train was just stopping at the station, when it was run into with great force by the switch engine.

Fell Under the Wheels.

DELHI, Aug. 3.—M. J. McLaughlin, formerly of Delhi, was killed by falling under the wheels of an engine on the Northern Pacific Railway at Pasco, Wash., last week. He was formerly an operator at Oakville and Jarvis on the Grand Trunk Railway. He was a brakeman on the Northern Pacific, and after closing a switch went to jump on the locomotive when he slipped and fell under the wheels.

Scared but Not Hurt.

GREENPORT, L.I., Aug. 3.—The steamer Sunshine, plying between Hartford and New London and Greenport and Sag Harbor, L.I., struck on a rock off Orient Point, L.I., at 6.50 p.m. yesterday. She had 280 passengers aboard and the wildest confusion prevailed for a time. Nobody was hurt.

The Dominion's Merchant Marine.

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—The report on shipping just issued by the Department of Marine shows that the total number of vessels remaining on the registry books of the Dominion Dec. 31, 1889, including old and new vessels—sailing vessels, steamers and barges—was 7153, measuring 1,040,481 tons registered tonnage, being an increase of 11 vessels and a decrease of 49,161 tons register as compared with 1888. The number of steamers on the registry books on the same date was 1348, with a gross tonnage of 205,692 tons. Assuming the average value to be $30 per ton, the value of the registered tonnage of Canada, Dec. 31 last, would be $31,213,430. The number of vessels built and registered in the Dominion of Canada during last year was 280, measuring 31,346 tons registered tonnage. Estimating the value of new tonnage at $45 per ton, it gives a total value of $1,[illegible]570 for new vessels.

Fatal Interference With Lovers.

WHEELING, W. Va., Aug. 2.—At Martin's Ferry yesterday Ann Newland, one of the most beautiful and popular young ladies of this city, shot herself through the heart with a revolver which she had borrowed from her lover. Miss Newland was engaged to marry Hally Woods, a prominent business man, to whom her parents objected on account of his religion. Thursday night they forbade Woods the house, and failing to persuade the girl to marry him at once, Woods told Miss Newland that he would leave the city. The action of her parents and the impending departure of her lover drove the girl to take her own life. Woods is nearly insane from grief, and Miss Newland's mother is prostrated.

Settled by Killing the Negro.

RALEIGH, N.C., Aug. 2.—Julian Jones, colored, had a difficulty with a white man on the principal business street here to-day and knocked him down. Policeman Hogue called on William Utley, a well-known newspaper man, to assist in quelling the disturbance. Jones knocked Utley down, and in a scuffle with Officer Hogue got his club and was about to use it when the officer drew a pistol and fired three times at Jones, the last shot proving fatal. One shot struck a clerk in a neighboring store in the leg. Some feeling was exhibited among the negroes at the killing of Jones.

Don't sign any paper which a stranger presents, no matter what he says about it, and no matter how innocent the thing appears. It is the season when gangs of swindlers visit the rural districts—glib-tongued fellows who have educated themselves to lie black out of white.

THE MONARCHS' MEETING.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S RECEPTION AT OSTEND.

The Socialists' Expected Hostile Demonstration Fails to Materialize—Belgium to be Taken Into the Triple Alliance as a Silent Partner.

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—When the German imperial yacht Hohenzollern entered Ostend harbor to-day immense crowds, including a host of German and English visitors, lined the quay. King Leopold, accompanied by the Count of Flanders, went on board the Hohenzollern and effusive greetings were exchanged between the King and Emperor William and Prince Henry. The two monarchs then retired to the saloon of the yacht, where they conversed for half an hour. Afterwards the Emperor went ashore, and after inspecting the guard of honor from the garrison, received the Belgian Ministers and the staff of the German legation. Later the Kaiser and King Leopold drove to the summer palace, followed by Prince Henry and the Count of Flanders. The whole route was densely lined by spectators and the cheering was incessant.

Warnings have reached the Berlin police that the anarchists of Liege, who are affiliated with the French socialists, meant to make a hostile demonstration, and if possible to attack the person of the Kaiser. This information caused extra precautions to be taken, and a force of German private police assisted the Belgian police. Nothing, however, marred the enthusiasm of the welcome.

At the palace the Belgian Prime Minister, Foreign Minister and Minister of War had talks with the Emperor. Ostend was everywhere en fete. To-night there was a torchlight procession comprising military bands from Ghent, Antwerp, Namur and Brussels and 1800 soldiers bearing Japanese lanterns and other illuminated devices. Balls were given and there was a universal frolic until early morning. The Emperor's visit to Ostend will terminate Monday.

Official expectation here is that the interview between the monarchs will result in Belgium becoming a sleeping partner in the triple alliance. The political character of the meeting is undoubted. No conference with a ruling monarch that the Emperor has projected has been a mere courtesy. The progress of Gen. Brialmont's plans for a chain of frontier fortresses and the relations of the Congo State and German East Africa will engage the attention of the monarchs. King Leopold, who is debarred from actual adhesion to the triple alliance, is as strongly biased thereto as the Belgian policy permits. He knows that if disaster befal Germany in a war with France Belgium would have small chance of being spared by the French. The personal esteem of the monarchs added to the cordiality of their meeting.

Family meetings will be held at Osborne to determine the question whether Prince Waldemar of Denmark or Prince Oscar of Sweden shall be placed on the Bulgarian throne. Emperor William favors Prince Oscar as the better choice on the ground of his personal qualities. The Czar, hitherto opposed to having his brother-in-law the ruler of Bulgaria, now assents. The Greek royalties strongly object to Waldemar. King George has written to friends in the Danish and English Courts that the election of his brother to the Bulgarian throne would raise a feeling of jealousy among the Greeks and would imperil the Duke of Sparta's succession to the throne of Greece. Diplomatists who are watching this embroglio attribute the Czar's choice of Waldemar to a desire to keep the Balkan mess fermenting.

Orders have been sent to the frontier customs ports and to the railways in Poland to watch for the threatened migration of Jews from Russia. The new Russian regulations, though not expressly aimed at expulsion of the Jews, will tend to drive from the country vast bodies of artisans and the poorest farming Jews who are largely settled in the frontier provinces. The leading Jewish firms in Berlin, Hamburg and Frankfort have communicated with representative Jews in London for the purpose of preparing relief for distressed Hebrews. Letters from Rabbis in Russia mention September as the period for enforcing the regulations. The dread of wholesale transportation to Siberia for failure to observe the edicts will impel the flight westward of many thousands of Jews.

The Russian papers announce that transportation to Siberia will shortly be abolished as a judicial punishment. They omit to mention that it will be maintained as now without a judicial sentence.

The latest notable instance of this kind is the case of the celebrated novelist Glyeb-Uspensky. He was arrested at night, being taken from his bed, and was confined for a month in a secluded prison. Any knowledge of his whereabouts was refused his friends for a long time. Finally they were told he had been sent to Sartov pending the pleasure of the police. It is supposed his offence was writing a letter to the Czar in support of the memorandum sent His Majesty by Madam Issbrikova. Uspensky holds a high literary position in Russia, where he is as prominent as is Daudet in France or Howells in America. He was, however, treated as a common criminal.

A medical scientific exhibition in connection with the International Medical Congress opened here to-day. A host of delegates to the congress were present. Dr. Lassar made the inaugural address. He dilated upon the advantages of the exhibition, which made the results of scientific research the common property of humanity. A number of American delegates attended yesterday's centenary of the Berlin Veterinary College. They were introduced to Chancellor von Caprivi and Minister Herrfurth.

SHOT BY HIS MISTRESS.

A British Columbia Murder—The End of Illicit Love.

VICTORIA, B.C., Aug. 3.—It was reported here this morning that murder had been committed during the night at Cobble Hill Station on the Island Railway between here and Nanaimo. The victim was a rancher named Joseph Dongan, who was shot through the heart by a woman with whom he had been living for some time. Particulars of the crime were not obtainable other than that the shooting was fatal and the result of a drunken quarrel.

Mrs. Routledge, the murderess, has several times before attempted to kill Dongan, for whom she deserted her husband a few years ago, and she has been arrested.

An inquest was held to-day, the jury returning a verdict of manslaughter.

IN THE INTEREST OF ONTARIO FARMERS.

In this Province the Liberals profess to be the very especial friends of the Ontario farmers and their pleas for free trade or commercial union are based upon the alleged interest of the farmers of the Province. But in Quebec a different story is told. Speaking in Montmorency during the recent campaign there Mr. Laurier said:—

"They began by imposing a duty of 50 cents upon every barrel of flour that you use, and last session the tax was increased to 75 cents per barrel. Sir Adolphe Caron should be opposed to this tax for the reason that the Province of Quebec does not produce wheat in any considerable quantities. This tax, however, was not imposed of public necessity, as it is alleged that there is a surplus of seven millions, but rather in the interest of the Ontario and Manitoba farmers, who raise wheat in great quantities."

The Liberal leader further intimated that the Conservative party had obtained the votes of the farmers of Ontario and Manitoba by giving them their sister province of Quebec to starve! Mr. Laurier's feelings, while he is in Quebec, are not harrowed by the "deplorable condition" of the farmers of Ontario, for there he weeps because the tariff is framed in their interest. This speech not only shows the hollowness of Liberal pretences, for it also exhibits a new phase of the Liberal trick of trying to array province against province in order that they may make political capital.

While the leader of the Liberals had no consideration for Ontario farmers, he had just as little for Canadian manufacturers He said:—

"It has been stated that unrestricted reciprocity would be injurious to the Canadian manufacturer. This is not true, BUT, EVEN IF IT WERE unlimited reciprocity would be the best system because it favors the agricultural classes, who are the source of our country's wealth and power."

It may be just as well to permit a Liberal paper to answer its leader on the question of unrestricted reciprocity. The Dundas Banner in a recent issue said:—

"Our erudite and able contemporary, the Hamilton Times, is still crying for the moon, and seems to think that it is the duty of Liberal journals generally to follow its example. It wants the principle of free trade adopted in Canada. But what is the use of advocating the adoption of free trade in Canada when the United States will not trade free with you? You cannot have free trade unless somebody will free trade with you, and this, it is perfectly clear, the United States has no intention of doing. It is all very well to say that when the Democratic party comes into power once more it will adopt a broader platform in its dealings with Canada, and that it will not be long after it assumes the reins of office before it will go in for free trade with Canada. We have heard that fairy tale before. The Democratic party came into power in the United States and never bothered its head about Canada, in so far as trade matters are concerned, if we except the issue by President Cleveland of a bombastic proclamation in which he threatened to close American ports to Canadian vessels and shut out Canadian railways. There was not much free trade about that. The long and the short of the matter is that Canada requires to raise every year about forty million dollars, and the only way to raise it, barring direct taxation, is by imposing customs duties."

LUMBER.

Some of our Reform contemporaries are worrying about the lumber trade. It is dull, they say, and they want the dullness charged up to the National Policy. It may be pointed out that during the past five years exports of lumber have been as follows:—

18 5	$20,209,708
1886	21,051,811
1887	20,404,746
1888	21,043,007

No doubt there is a little lull just at the present moment which will be temporary, as it is due to temporary causes. The production of lumber in Canada is greater than ever before, because, while exports do not fall off, the home consumption steadily increases. In 1878 the exports of all products of the forest were valued at $19,511,875. But it was necessary to export a much larger quantity of lumber to sell for that $19,500,000 than for the $23,000,000 obtained in 1889. A few comparisons may not be uninteresting. The following table shows the export values of the principal articles, products of the forest, exported in the years named:

	1878.	1889.
Pot and pearl ashes, bbl	$15 14	$28 18
Tan bark, cord	3 30	4 37
Firewood, cord	1 92	2 16
Logs, 100 feet	3 91	6 14
Planks and boards, 1,000	10 00	11 50
Square timber, white pine, ton	9 44	18 45

And so on. The export of lumber and other products of the forest has increased of late years. It was larger in 1889 than in 1878 The prices realized were considerably higher. The home consumption was much greater.

Now, how will our Reform friends deal with these facts? Why, in this way: They will say that the monopolistic lumbermen are exacting higher prices than they used to charge, and so are oppressing the poor farmer. The farmer is compelled to pay higher prices for lumber than he used to pay; he is compelled to charge higher prices for his grain and so oppresses the poor workingman. The workingman is compelled to pay higher prices for his food than he used to pay; he is compelled to demand higher wages than he used to get, and so oppresses the poor manufacturer. The poor manufacturer is compelled to pay higher wages than formerly; he is therefore compelled to charge more for his goods than he used to charge, and so oppresses the poor lumberman. And it is all the fault of that odious John A., who makes everybody pay higher prices, and who obstinately continues to live and to govern the country, when it is his plain duty to die or else retire to a nunnery. Take it all around, it is a sad, weary world. But the wicked Tories go on just as the antediluvians did until the flood came and swallowed them all. Yes, it is a sad, weary world. —Hamilton Spectator.

The chief of police of Moscow has issued orders that those who sell papers or other printed matter in the streets, shall not be allowed to pursue their vocation if they are not dressed in proper uniform, or if they do not appear clean and tidy. From the date of this order two weeks was allowed the venders of the newspapers to get their uniforms into proper shape.

A pretty sight often seen on St. Charles avenue, New Orleans, is a little boy riding a bicycle with his black-an-tan dog standing behind him. The dog holds on by resting his front paws on his master's neck, and appears to have no fear, no matter how rapidly they travel. The Picayune says that the other day the dog grew weary of the sport before the boy; so, without, any ado, he tucked his head down on the boy's shoulder and went to sleep.

The process known as platrage, which consists of adding sulphate of potassium to a thin wine in order to give it body, was thoroughly debated by the French chamber. Two grammes of this substance may now, by the law of France, be added to a litre of wine. It was moved to make it legal to add two and a half grammes or more to a litre, but the motion was rejected by 170 votes to 53. Germany forbids platrage, but Italy and Switzerland permit the same quantity as France.

A butler in London brought an action against his former employer for the libel said to lie in reply to an inquiry about the butler's character, which said: "I discharged John Walsh for insolence." In consequence of this he lost a subsequent engagement. The insolence had been shown to the defendant's wife and was not denied. The judge said that it was for the plaintiff to show malicious misrepresentation on defendant's part, and the jury gave a verdict for the latter.

Few persons know how excellent a razor strop is the human hand or arm. If a razor is in fairly good condition and not in need of the oil stone it may soon be whetted to a fine edge on the palm of the hand or the inner side of the forearm. The latter is best if it is free of hair, as it frequently is, for it presents a whetting surface quite as long as the ordinary razor strop. The fat portion of the palm, between the little finger and the wrist, however, makes an excellent strop. The process of stropping a razor on the forearm appears a bit alarming to the looker-on, though there is little danger that a skillful man will do himself harm.

Since the snow has melted and the passage from Turkey opened, the border lands of the district of Kars are troubled with bands of Turkish robbers. Such a band, of sixteen men, assailed the village of Panaskert. Part of them threw themselves upon the peasants and some remained outside to prevent the people sending notice to the post of Cossacks in the neighborhood. But by some chance the Cossacks became aware of the attack and hastened to the rescue. A lively fusillade took place between them and the robbers. Three of the latter were killed and one was captured, the rest escaped. One of the Cossacks was killed and two wounded; but the property of the villagers was saved.

A queer old chap turns up about Union square, New York, these days about 5 o'clock in the morning with a broom and a pan. In saloons in the neighborhood he has the privilege of sweeping. No public places in the city are cleaned more thoroughly than they or at less expense. The work costs the proprietors nothing and it is a necessary feature of the old chap's business that he should be painstaking. From out his sweepings he gathers up every cork and every wanamaker he empties with extreme care, looking all the time for coins. It is said that on the average he makes a fair day's wages from silver thus gathered up, but his sure income is realized from the corks. Such of these as are not broken he whittles down to a size that will fit the small phials used by druggists. He sells these at prices which make it profitable to the druggists, and the refuse, the shavings and broken bits, he disposes of to men who pack bottles for transportation.

Professor Rucker's New "Divining Rod."

We have heard a good deal concerning the divining rod being used for finding underground supplies of water. The trick is a very ancient one, and lost nothing of its cleverness by being handed down for generations from father to son. The divining rod could find out where copper, tin, lead, zinc, or other metals lay buried below the surface of the earth, as well as discover water. The only thing that led to skepticism was that it professed to find too much. But, after all, the divining rod, made of a twig of hazel with a forked end, was perhaps the rude predecessor of the scientific instrument which Professor Rucker has just made known to the Royal Society; just as the rough Palæolithic flint instrument was the antecedent of the modern surgeon's lancet and the cavalry sword. Briefly, Professor Rucker's magnetometer is an adaptation of the well-known magnetic compass. It indicates the occurrence of subterranean strata lying beneath those which appear on the surface, if they are magnetic or contain much iron, as basaltic and many other igneous rocks do. Consequently, although this simple instrument cannot tell us if coal occurs deep down beneath, it cannot pronounce where it does not. In the important paper on "Coal in Southeastern England," read by Mr. William Whitaker before the Society of Arts on April 23, Mr. Whitaker had occasion to refer to Professor Rucker's recent discovery, and after the paper was read, Professor Rucker joined in the discussion. Professor Rucker and Professor Thrope (of Leeds) have for some time past been noting the behavior of the magnetic needle in various parts of Great Britain, and they found that it frequently misbehaves; in other words, it is deflected in certain places from what would be regarded as its proper direction. The explanation is that the deflection is due to great masses of iron-bearing rocks, such as basalt, even when they are buried up beneath chalk and tertiary strata. Thus the new instrument has been the means of demonstrating hitherto unsuspected relations between the magnetic properties and geological characters of various districts. Professors Rucker and Thorpe have in this way proved that there was magnetic attraction along certain definite lines which run across England. One is from the Lynn Wash to the line of the Midland Railway between Hawes and Settle (in Yorkshire), a distance of one hundred and fifty miles. They further stated, with confidence, that a line from somewhere near the south of the Thames, running through the South Wales coal fields, was a line to which the magnet was attracted, especially near Reading. Professor Rucker is of opinion that the needle is affected by the direct magnetic properties of the underlying rocks, and this can only happen where iron is present in considerable quantities. How delicately the magnetic needle stands in relation to the iron-bearing underground rocks beneath any surface is proved by the fact that considerable effects might be produced upon it by rocks lying six or seven thousand feet below. Where such iron-bearing rocks are indicated to come up nearest the surface, coal can hardly be expected to be found; and, further, in those localities where the underlying rocks come nearest the surface, the downward pull on the magnetic needle was found to be very great.—Scientific Gossip.

The Rafting Pin.

A rafting pin appears to be a very simple thing and of trifling importance, but is not so inconsequential after all, when the number used annually is taken into consideration, and the amount of hardwood timber consumed in their production is understood. The Tittabawassee and other boom companies in Michigan use millions of these little and simple devices, one pin being required to every log "tied out" by them; and the firms producing them use up whole "train loads" of logs in their manufacture. They are simply a wedge-shaped piece of wood with sufficient of the center of the wedge removed to admit the insertion of a small sized rope, so that when they are driven into the center of each log they cover the rope and hold it firm. When the logs thus fastened in strings reach their destination, a slight blow breaks the pin, loosens the rope, and permits the logs to be handled separately. It will thus be perceived that millions of the little devices are made and destroyed annually.—Timberman.

Feeding Swine.

In order to obtain the best results all around the pigs should be taught to eat as early in life as possible. In some cases this will be when they are about two weeks old. The time of teaching them to eat will vary. The size of the litter in some cases, and in others the amount of the milk given by the dam, will govern it. Teaching them to eat is best accomplished by placing a small trough out of reach of the dam and supplying it with warm, sweet, skimmed milk and soaked maize. When the pigs get fairly to eating be careful to increase the feed as gradually as the pig's power of assimilation increases.

Right here care should be exercised in feeding the dam. Avoid getting her "off her feed." There is nothing so well adapted to make young pigs grow as their dam's milk. While feeding the pigs liberally the sow should be fed all she will eat of the food best calculated to make her give large quantities of milk. Good shorts mixed with bran, or the shorts alone made into a slop and soaked between feeds, accompanied by a few ears of corn, make a good milk giving ration.

Too Late.

Just in the gray of morning the other day a policeman on Second avenue saw a man dodging around in a rather suspicious manner and he finally cornered him and demanded an explanation.

"I'm a grocer's collector," he explained.

"But what are you out so early for?"

"Family over there owes us $30, and I expect they will start for Long Branch this morning. I thought I'd be on hand with the bill."

"Well, you are considerably too late. They went out by the alley gate at 11 o'clock last night!"

FOWLS AND EGGS FOR MARKET.

Advice That May Prove Useful to Beginners.

In raising fowls for market flesh is the first consideration. Select therefore a breed which will make the greatest growth in the shortest time and be good quality for the table. Select according to the requirement of your own special market and your fancy—Langshans, Brahmas, Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Javas or Dorkings. These varieties, with their crosses, are hardy and, if intelligently fed, attain a large size at an early age. The Wyandotte just now is a popular fowl, the silvers, goldens and blacks all having enthusiastic admirers; the white Wyandottes are also receiving high praise from their advocates. It is claimed that they are not only ornamental in the yards and toothsome of flesh, but good layers as well. The dark Brahmas are classed by many breeders as the best of the Brahma varieties.

With careful management there is none of our small industries that is more profitable than raising eggs for our city markets. When eggs alone are desired the fowls selected should be Leghorns, white faced black Spanish, Minorcas or other laying breeds. Avoid the common mistake of giving too much stimulating food. Bear in mind the elements that enter into the composition of an egg and feed accordingly. Oats, wheat and barley are all good for eggs, with just enough corn to supply the proper degree of heat. A sudden change from one kind of grain to another will often stop hens from laying for a short time, as will sudden change of any feed. Whole corn, being hard to digest, should be given very sparingly to laying pullets. Supplement the food of laying hens with an occasional relish of ground bone, chopped meat and charcoal.

A Big Fish Story.

Mr. John Dinwoodie, our local sport left Lakefield on Monday morning at 8 o'clock, says the Chronicle, and paddled up to Dr. Bell's island in Clear Lake narrows. After spending an hour or two visiting friends he paddled back to Young's Point and took the Mary Ellen for home. During the trip he secured 6 maskinonge of which the following are the weights:—1 sixteen lbs., 1 twelve lbs., 3 ten each, and 1 seven lbs., making a total of 65 lbs, for his days sport. Who says there's not good fishing in spite of heat and thunder storms?

The Lock Works on the Diamond.

A baseball match was played on the Riverside park on Saturday afternoon between the married men and the single men employed in the lock works. Seven innings were played, and although the score was kept pretty even all along the married men won by two runs. W. Sharp was chosen umpire, and he performed the duties of that trying position in a careful manner. Both sides showed some very good play, the married men covering themselves with glory twice by a triple play, and on the whole the playing was very good, though, as was to be expected, occasional weaknesses were shown. The game was an interesting one, especially on account of the even scoring. The score was as follows:—

CRICKET MATCH

The Lakefield and Peterborough Clubs Meet Again

A return cricket match was played on the Athletic Association grounds on Saturday by teams of the Peterborough and Lakefield clubs. The Peterborough team went to bat first and ran up a score of 128, Dr. Brennan leading with the good score of 54 and S. Ray and Miles Hamilton following with scores of 20 and 22. Lakefield in its first innings made 108, H. LeFevre with 24, D'E. Strickland with 17, R. C. Strickland with 14, S. Baldwin with 12 and Jos. Watson with 11 making double scores. Peterborough again went to bat and made 146 runs, T. Rutherford leading with 28, and Brennan, Hamilton, J. H. Burnham, Ray and Turnbull also putting up double figures. Lakefield then went in with 176 to make, but they only succeed in getting a score of 57, A. Bell and R. Watson making double figures. Peterborough thus won by 117 runs. Turnbull's swift bowling was destructive to the Lakefield wickets, and the bowling all around was very good. The following is the score:—

Hamilton Band Tournament.

Bandmaster Miller has received from the secretary of the Hamilton Band tournament a notification that a practical bandmaster and conductor of renown, a resident of New York city, has been decided upon for judge of the tournament, which is very satisfactory to the band. The notice also states that the committee would like each band to be distinguished by some means to show where it comes from. The Peterborough band will take with them Mr. Snowden's large dog, which will be driven by Mr. Snowden's boy in a cart, and a covering over the dog will bear the name of this town. This distinguishing mark will be a novel one, and useful, as the cart will carry the music, and interesting as well.

A Batch of Accidents.

The Lakefield Chronicle says:—"On Thursday afternoon an accident happened to the 13 year old son of Mr. Jno. Neyes. It appears the boy was playing on one of the railway sidings whilst the cars were being shunted by the men employed in loading them. The little fellow was caught between the buffers and badly squeezed. Medical aid was called in and his injuries attended to. At present it is difficult to say what the result may be, as it is feared the internal injuries are more serious than the external.......On Thursday afternoon as Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald, of North Smith was driving to Lakefield accompanied by two ladies, the horses became unmanageable, running away, and completely smashing the rig and seriously injuring the occupants.......On Wednesday afternoon as Mr. Saml. Wallace was leaving his barn yard with one of his horses attached to a stone boat, the horse took fright and ran away. In endeavoring to stop the flight of the horse Mr. Wallace was knocked down and badly bruised. He will be confined to the house for a few days."

THE LAKE OF ISLANDS.

A TERRIFIC STORM AT STONY LAKE YESTERDAY.

A Cottage Struck by Lightning—A Large Population at the Lake—The Fishing Good—Religious Services.

Correspondence of the Review.

STONY LAKE, Aug. 4, '90.

The residents at Peterborough's popular summer resort, Stony Lake, are daily being increased in numbers and the season is now in full sway. Numbers of persons from a distance are spending a holiday at Stony Lake for the first time this year and the opinion of all is that, notwithstanding all that has been said of Stony Lake as a summer resort, the half has not yet been told. An American gentleman remarked to your correspondent that in five years Stony Lake would be a more popular resort and more widely patronized that the Thousand Islands or most of the other well known resorts. This, it would seem, is quite probable, for there are many advantages enjoyed at Stony Lake which are not to be had at the Thousand Islands.

The week that has just passed has been a glorious one for the camping community here. The weather has been exceedingly warm, but the gentle breezes which seldom seem to tire of fanning the waters of the charming lake with its many beautiful islands, made the campers stretch themselves in their summer retreats and meditate with selfish complacence on the perspiring thousands they had left amid the bustle of the cities and towns. All last week only one rain storm disturbed the tranquility of camp life and that one was of short duration. This week, however, was ushered in yesterday and the quiet of a Stony Lake Sabbath broken by one of the most severe storms that has been experienced here. It was about two o'clock that the heavy clouds came down from the north-west and the storm burst upon the lake as suddenly and with almost as much fury as a tornado. A few distant rumbles of thunder were the only heralds of the storm's approach when it swept over the lakes. The rain came down in perfect torrents while the wind was terrific. In a moment the beautiful waters of the lake were lashed into a foam, the wind lifting the waters in sheets and confining the vision to the length of one's arm. The wind and rain were accompanied by almost continuous lightning and thunder, and to a person who was safely domiciled within a cottage and who was void of all fear the storm was one of grandeur, inspiring the stranger to such storms in such a locality with feelings of awe. The flash of the lightning across the black, murky sky, rending the dense clouds in its zig-zag course, together with the continuous roar of the celestial artillery as it echoed across the waters from rock to rock and island to island, awoke feelings which would have inspired a poet's pen and make man feel his nothingness in the hands of the Ruler of the Universe. The storm lasted in its fury for about fifteen minutes, but ere the elements had again sunk into repose many a canvas house had been laid on the ground and the poor unfortunates who had put their trust in the house with the four canvas walls found themselves exposed to the drenching rain. No canoe or boat could have weathered the blow, but the reports of a limited radius show that no serious damage was done and no loss of life marked the visit of the storm. The from a calamity was at Mr. W. A. Sanderson's residence back of Boschink. When the storm was at its heaviest the lightning struck the front of the house just about the centre. The fluid ran down the front of the house, splitting the door and breaking three panes of glass. Mr. Sanderson was standing only a few feet from the door when the electricity came down, and he, Mrs. Sanderson the children and servant were shaken by the shock. Fortunately no fire was ignited and the house escaped with comparatively little damage.

The sad drowning accident at Eels Creek which has already been reported in the REVIEW startled the camping community and cast a gloom over all. Expressions of sympathy were universal. The shooting accident at Fish island, although not of a serious character, also furnished the Stony Lake residents with a little ripple of excitement when the news of its occurrence began to be circulated. However, news up here does not travel very rapidly and many of the campers did not know the particulars of the accidents until the Peterborough papers arrived here. The shooting accident was kept very quiet, the unfortunate young man's comrades wishing to hush the affair up. When the wounded man was being paddled to the store by his friends inquirers were told that he had a cramp and he himself told the same story, desiring to keep the shooting quiet.

As to the campers who are here, your readers have already been given a pretty full list of the new houses and residents in previous letters. Nearly every cottage while tents dot the islands on every hand. Mr. D. H. Moore's new cottage has been completed and is now occupied, while Mr. J. G. Weir is also in his new house. Mr. Sloan, the American gentleman, who has erected the handsome new lodge at Boschink, came up on Saturday. The new lodge has been fitted up with an eye to comfort and convenience and will be an elegant summer residence. Mr. Thos. Dolan and family, Miss LeMay, Mr. Frank Faires, Mr. H. LeBrun, Mr. J. Doherty and Mr. Fleming have spent a pleasant week or two at Mr. McIntyre's cottage. Some of the party return to town this week, when Mrs. McIntyre will come up. At "the syndicate" a large party are enjoying the beauties of the lakes, at the cottages of the Messrs. A. and B. Hall and W. G. Ferguson.

IS NOW OCCUPIED,

GOOD FISHING.

Miss Walker, of Hall, Innes & Co., who was spending a few days at Mr. Hall's cottage, was the heroine of a true fish story, On Tuesday morning last she was the fortunate capturer of a fine twelve pound 'lunge and needless to say she was proud of her capture and the congratulations of all her friends. Our competent Street Inspector, Mr. Pope, has not fished in vain. On Wednesday morning he brought in seven fine 'lunge after a couple of hours fishing. Burn's bay was the fruitful fishing grounds. Mr. E. B. Stone has also had pretty good luck with the line. In fact the fishing has been very good here and the honors have been pretty well distributed. At "Anchorage Cottage" a party consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Paterson and family, Miss Sophie Cameron, Miss J. Rose, Miss Mackay, of Belleville, Messrs. T. Armstrong, W. F. Green, W. Delaney, of Cobourg, and others are enjoying life here. Mr. Paterson captured five good 'lunge on Friday morning, fishing towards the head of the lake. A live porcupine was also captured by one of this party and a menagerie was contemplated. However, Mr. A. Hall saw a better use for the animal of the quills and accordingly the Peterborough public will view a live porcupine in the window of the second ward councillor's store on George-st. Mr. B. Shortly has completed his pretty cottage which will be known as "High View." There Mr. and Mrs. Shortly and family, Miss Lizzie Rutherford, Miss Effie Blanchard, of Napanee, Mr. Walter Geern, of Napanee, Mr. J. Shibley, of Rochester, Master Norman McLeod are enjoying the fresh breezes and beauties of Peterborough's summer resort. Mr. and Mrs. J. Nugent are at Dr. Caldwell's cottage, and the former, as usual, has had great luck in tempting the the wary lunge with his new troll (his own make) which is now known on the lake as the "beedle bait." Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Lee are also at their cottage. On Saturday night both the steamers brought up a crowd of people, many to stay for a short holiday and others just for Sunday. To mention the many campers here would be impossible.

THE Y. M. C. A. CAMP.

The Y.M.C.A. camp at Juniper Island is now running in good order. Yesterday morning at eleven o'clock a service was held at the island. The residents and campers paddled or sailed over to the number of about one hundred, and enjoyed a very pleasant service under the shade of the spreading trees of Juniper. Mr. Cole, Travelling Secretary, Rev. Mr. Reddick, of Port Hope, Rev. Mr. Trotter, of Clairmont, Rev. W. Roger, of London, and Mr. R. J. Colville, General Secretary, all took part in the service. Rev. Mr. Reddick delivered an interesting, short and practical sermon on the divinity and humanity of Christ, taking for his text the first clause of the first verse and the first clause of the fourteenth verse of the first chapter of John.

In the evening another service was held at the same place, while another service was to be held at Boschink.

NOTES ON THE LAKES.

The lakes are now entirely free of logs, the last drive having passed through last week.

"Jack" Hanenburg, one of Peterborough's tonsorial artists, has opened a barber shop at the store on Juniper Island. He does a rushing business and cleans the face in the most improved style of a city barber shop.

The song of the camper which wakes the echoes of the morning when the sun has made the tent a furnace is the old familiar "Up in the morning nae for me, Up in the morning early."

Fish stories are numerous, of course, but to relate them would fill a book.

GAMES AT THE EXHIBITION.

Arrangements Made for Scottish Games and Athletic Sports.

A meeting of a committee of the Central Exhibition directors and representatives of the St. Andrew's Society was held at the Morgan House on Saturday evening. The directors present were Messrs. H. C. Winch, A. P. Morgan, James Davidson, Geo. Elliott, and the Secretary, Wm. Collins. The St. Andrew's Society representatives were Messrs. Chas. Cameron, President; Geo. H. Noble, Vice-President; R. M. Dennistoun, Treasurer; W. Menzies, Secretary, and W. Battesby.

In the absence of President Rutherford, Mr. Winch acted as chairman during the evening, and called upon the St. Andrew's deputation to state their case.

The deputation then recited the details of their visit to Toronto, and the satisfactory result of their interview with the various representatives of the Scottish societies for securing the attendance of Highlanders, pipers and others who usually take part in Scottish games throughout the Province. The secretary also read the following letter, which he had received since the return of the deputation, from J. M. Wingfield, Grand Chief of the Grand Camp, Sons of Scotland:—

GRAND CAMP, SONS OF SCOTLAND,
OFFICE OF GRAND CHIEF,
TORONTO, 1st August, 1890.

DEAR SIR,—Your favor to hand regarding a Scotch day during your exhibition. Since your president was here I have seen some of our pipers and other who usually take part in our games, and they say if the prizes are liberal they will go; and if a cheap trip can be arranged from Toronto on the day, you will have a great many from this city. I will do what I can to encourage our men, as opportunity offers, to take in your games. I feel some interest in your town, as I thing you ought to have a camp of the Sons of Scotland.

Wishing you every success in your undertaking.

I am, sir, yours very truly,
J. M. WINGFIELD,

After some further talk the exhibition committee expressed themselves unanimously in favor of securing this additional attraction to the fair, and, on motion, a resolution was passed closing with the terms proposed for the same. An agreement was then drawn up and signed by the respective secretaries of the two bodies, after which the deputation withdrew.

This should be a good drawing card for the exhibition, as the executive of the St. Andrew's society are men who will make their part a success.

For The A. C. A.

Mr. M. C. Bennett, secretary of the Executive Committee for the Long island A. C. A. meet, writes that the Secretary of the Treasury has instructed all customs offices on the border to allow canoes and duffle through to the United States free of duty. Members going to the meet will be glad to learn of this concession.

Mr. Chester Howard, son of Major Howard, of the Hastings Star, who is employed in a drug store in that village, was injured on Saturday by an explosion of ammonia. The cork of the bottle flew out and the fluid struck Mr. Howard in the face and eyes. He came to town in the evening and consulted Dr. Yelland, but, fortunately, it is not thought that any permanent injury to his eyes will result.

The Late Mr. Baughman.

Rev. W. F. Baughman, the young clergyman who was drowned in Stony Lake, was entering on his second year as Christian minister in Bowmanville. Eleven months ago he married Miss Martha Butchart, of Hamilton. His boyhood home was in Indiana. The party only arrived at Stony Lake three days before the accident occurred and was composed of Mr., Mrs. and Miss Fuller, of Toronto, Mrs. and Miss Butchart, of Hamilton, Mr. Cooper, of Toronto and Mr. and Mrs. Baughman.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

There was a fair attendance at our Saturday night meeting. Mr. F. Saunders led the meeting.

The Consecration meeting on Sunday morning was led by Mr. A. Hamilton.

The open air service was not held in the afternoon owing to the rain.

The Gospel and song service last night was addressed by the Rev. Mr. Sylvester, of Toronto, who spoke some encouraging words to our young men on Y.M.C.A. work Bible Class on Tuesday at 8 p.m.

A SEVERE STORM.

A House in Town and a Barn in Smith Struck by Lightning.

This section was visited by two severe storms yesterday, one in the afternoon and the other in the evening. The rain fell in torrents and was accompanied by lightning thunder and a strong wind.

At about 7.30 o'clock in the evening Mr. Robert Hull's house on Wescott-st. was struck by lightning. It struck a chimney on the south-east corner, scattered the bricks, ran along the roof to the centre of house, and then descended the side of the house to the ground, tearing off boards as it went. The roof was also lifted up at one corner. Bricks were thrown forty or fifty feet away and clapboards were thrown across the street. Mr. and Mrs. Hull were sitting in the dining room, in the centre of the house, at the time, and Mrs. Hull, who was near a window, was slightly stunned, but beyond that they were uninjured. The damage will probably amount to $20, covered by insurance with Messrs. Mulholland & Roper.

Mr. John Stewart, of the 9th concession of Smith, suffered more severely. At about three o'clock in the afternoon his barn was struck by lightning on the north wing. This part of the barn was used for the stable and the loft where the lightning struck was full of hay, which caught fire at once and burned rapidly. Mr. Stewart was in the barn at the time, and, with the assistance of neighbors who came to his aid, got out the animals and vehicles. The barn—or both barns, for he had only finished building a new frame barn on Friday was totally destroyed, and with it were burned about nineteen tons of hay, thirty bushels of oats and barley off two and a half acres, besides tools. The house was only saved by hard work, as the wind blew in that direction and sparks and blazing shingles lit upon it. There was no insurance on the new barn, but there was $200 on the old structure and the contents were covered by insurance.

The wind was destructive to trees and fences. In town a number of shade trees were blown down. A piece of the fence at the Athletic Association grounds was blown down and a large portion of the fence on the west side was almost toppled over and will need repairing or rebuilding.

Gospel Temperance Song Service.

Those who gathered in the Royal Templar's Hall yesterday afternoon enjoyed a rare treat. The Rev. C. Sylvester, of Toronto, gave an address which was brief, pointed and inspiring. He contrasted the meetings of 50 years ago when he signed the teetotal pledge, where they had no prayer nor any Gospel Songs and where no woman thought of going with the worshipful gathering of to-day. That was the starlight. Now we dwelt in the sunlight. A graphic account was given of a gutter drunkard who signed the pledge in the early days of the temperance movement, and thus put himself in a position where the light from the Sun of Righteousness had a chance to shine into his heart. He became a Christian gentleman of independent fortune, a credit to his friends and a blessing to his town. Workers were exhorted to take courage from the fact that all churches now recognize the temperance movement. There was a time when the few ministers who gave it countenance were considered weak-minded. Those who plead that the Bible sanctions drinking customs, were reminded that there are many records of the destruction of that which before had been commanded by God. Witness the brazen serpent which was erected for the salvation of Israel. When afterwards it became a snare to the people, God ordered it to be broken and destroyed. So granting that the Bible does permit the use of strong drinks, shall we, in the full blaze of the nineteenth century, dare to plead for that which is a greater snare to soul and body than was the brazen serpent? The movement is going to prosper: 1. Because God is on the side of all that lifts mankind to where the light of His countenance can rest upon him; 2. Because all really good and pure men are in sympathy with the work; 3. Because women everywhere are giving their prayers, their time and their energy to secure prohibition. Mrs. W. Fitzgerald presided at the piano, and Mr. Fitzgerald led the singing.

KNOW HOW —TO— KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"Say no more, my mistress; only let me serve you. You will have some refreshment—something to eat."

"You may bring me some wine, Zenobia."

And thereupon the young girl hastened away.

In the mean time the duke was in his private room below. He was pacing to and fro across the floor with his hands behind him, and his brow was dark and lowering. Ever and anon he would stop near the door and listen, and then proceed. At length there was a rap upon the door, and the duke said, "Enter." It was a priest who entered the apartment—a small, deformed man, somewhere about fifty years of age. His face was very dark; his features sharp and angular; his eyes dark, and sunken into his head; his brow heavy above the eyes, where the shaggy brow hung over, but sloping back from thence, leaving the points where phrenologists locate benevolence and veneration deficient and flat. Upon his shoulders he wore a huge, ungainly hump; and, all in all, he was just such a man as a timid person would shun. His name was Savotano. The duke had been the means of getting him into the church, and in consideration thereof he had bound himself to do the duke's evil work. But this is not all.

Some years before there had been a murder in Moscow, and Savotano did the bloody deed. It was a work of pure vengeance. Olga had him apprehended; but he was not brought to justice. The duke found him to be a shrewd, unscrupulous wretch, willing to serve those who would pay him well, and ready to let himself then to any one who could save his life. Olga was a man of plots and schemes. He fancied that such a man as Savotano might be of use to him; so he proposed to save him if he would serve his benefactor. The villain was glad enough to accept the proposition, and the bargain was made. Could Savotano enter the church, and assume the sacred garb, he might in many cases work to better advantage. The wretch readily agreed to this, too; and through Olga's powerful influence he gained a place in the church. He knew that the duke held his very life, and he failed not to serve him. His clerical robes shielded him from much suspicion; and, moreover, the place gave him additional advantages to work at his diabolical trade. His salary from the government was sufficient for his support, while an occasional sum from his master enabled him to enjoy many of those luxuries which were denied to most of his brethren. Olga feared not to trust this man, for the fellow had nothing to gain by betrayal, but everything to lose.

And such was the man who now entered the duke's private room. He entered with a bold air, for though he was somewhat in the duke's power, yet there was a peculiar satisfaction in knowing that when he fell the noble lord must fall with him, part way, at least. Brethren in crime cannot count much upon respect.

"I have come, my lord," the priest said, as he shook the snow from his robe, and then took a seat by the furnace-pipe.

"And how is the count?" asked Olga.

"He is recovering, I am sure."

"Does Kopani say so?"

"Yes. He says he will have him out within a month."

"By heavens, Savotano, this must not be."

"But tell me, my lord, what is the particular need of the count's departing?"

The duke gazed his visitor a few moments in the face, and then he said:

"Why, since the affair interests you, I'll tell you. Thus far I have paid you promptly all your dues, but I cannot do so much longer unless we can make some of our points work. My property is on the decrease fast. I have not enough left to live on. Within the past three years I have made some bad ventures. I put into—but never mind—suffice it for me to say that I am at the end of my fortune."

The duke was about to say that he had placed large sums in the hands of the Minister Galitzin for the purpose of carrying out the conspiracy by which the Princess Sophia was to have been placed upon the throne, with Galitzin for her prime minister, and himself also high in power. He chose not to tell of this—and no wonder, for heads had ere then been taken to pay for such indiscretions.

"And now if this count survives I thus have one source cut off. My half of Drotzen is used up and mortgaged to him, but if he dies the whole comes to me. His father and myself married sisters, and they owned Drotzen, and on his side the Count is the only heir; so in the event of his death the whole comes to me. You understand this now."

"Perfectly," returned the priest. "And 'tis a pity your first effort did not succeed."

"So it is," said the duke uneasily. "When I sent him with that message to the gun-maker I felt sure he would be slain, and then I hoped that the other could be disposed of for having slain him. But the Emperor has turned all my plans upside down, for the present at least. Savotano, you must have a hand in Damonoff's medicine!"

"That is easily done, my lord," replied the priest quietly.

"You have free access there?"

"Yes."

"And can you not watch with him some night?"

"I think I can."

"Then do so. When he is dead two hundred ducats are yours."

"Then he dies."

"Good!—And now there is one more. This gun-maker must be got out of the way."

"Ah," uttered Savotano, looking up inquisitively. "Do you mean so?"

"Most assuredly I do."

"But why him?"

"Do you fear to undertake the work?"

"Not at all, my lord; I only wished to know why he was wanted away."

"The reason is simple. I must marry with Rosalind Valdai. Her property is worth the whole of Drotzen twice told—over two million of ducats."

"So much!" uttered the priest, opening his eyes with greedy wonder.

"Yes; it is one of the finest estates in Moscow, and to pays her now a yearly income of a hundred thousand ducats. She does not know it—Ha, ha, ha—"

"Ha, ha, ha," laughed the priest in concert. "She don't, eh?"

"No—she knows nothing about it. But I must secure this; and in order to do it I must marry her; and—if I would be sure of that, this accursed gun-maker must be out of the way."

"But what is he to her?"

"She loves him."

"And is not your authority—"

"Hold, Savotano. I'll explain to you in a few words. I'm afraid the Emperor has taken a fancy to this youngster, and if he has he may be appealed to in this case. The girl will take marriage hard. I shall have to hire you to perform the ceremony."

"Which I shall be pleased to do," returned the priest, with a coarse smile.

"You shall have the opportunity. But first we must have the young Novogorodian case of."

"I think I can manage that, my lord."

"And how will you do it?"

"I suppose you don't want him put where he can get off and come back here."

"No. Finish him, while you are about it!"

"I will."

"But mind: it must be done so that in no possible way suspicion can fall upon me. You must contrive some way so that suspicion shall be led at once to some apparent point and there baffled."

To be continued.

A NEW ENGLAND SEAPORT.

The Canadian Pacific Seeking It Through the New York, Boston & Providence.

MONTREAL, Aug. 2.—It is rumored that the Boston & Maine is after the New York, Boston & Providence. The most startling feature of the contemplated deal is the published statement that the backers of the Boston & Maine are the Canadian Pacific. This line desires a New England seaport terminus whence a line of steamers could be run to New York. As the Boston & Maine now reaches to Worcester over the old Worcester & Nashua, the Providence & Worcester division of the New York, Providence & Boston, could it be obtained, would furnish the Canadian Pacific uninterrupted communication between Montreal and Providence.

The Providence & Worcester, together with the Concord and some western roads, have long been members of the Canadian Pacific despatch line. The merging of the New York, Providence & Boston in the Boston & Maine would mean the control of the Stonington Steamship Company's fine fleet by the latter corporation, as the road owns a controlling interest in the boats.

TORONTO TOPICS.

Killed While Coupling Cars—Died in An Operating Chair.

TORONTO, Aug. 4.—Yardman Lawrence Mahon was killed while coupling cars in the Grand Trunk yard near Brock-street early yesterday morning.

Thomas Butler died in Dr. Walwin's operating chair last night while being treated for a local disease. He had been despondent for some time and it is supposed he took a dose of poison with suicidal intent. An inquest will be held.

Oddfellows in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Arrangements are complete for the Oddfellows' demonstration which will begin here to-morrow. A grand stand has been built in the lake front park, which is nearly a half mile long and will seat 40,000 people. In the park are long avenues of poles on which hang hundreds of electric lights. When the great spectacular celebrations occur Wednesday and Thursday nights at the conclusion of the ceremony of the decoration of chivalry the generalissimo will place his foot upon a switch in his tent and the electric lights will instantly be put out. By pressing another switch he will send the electric current through the wires that fire the first piece of the great pyrotechnic display, causing a mighty eruption of fire from the shore of the lake and sending hundreds of shells into the air. Twenty-five thousand dollars will be distributed in prizes. It is estimated there will be 50,000 Oddfellows in Chicago by Tuesday. Governor Fifer and staff will take part in the parade Thursday.

Losses Caused by Flames.

FARINA, Ill., Aug. 2.—Fire broke out in the Farina Hotel last night and before it could be extinguished had consumed two blocks in the business centre of the town including the Farina Hotel, Broom's Hotel, Switzer's Opera House, Masonic Hall and 12 stores with most of the stocks of goods. Loss $50,000.

OMAHA, Neb., Aug 2.—The Lincoln Woolen Mills were burned to-day. Loss, $70,000; insurance, $15,000. S. G. Mitchell was struck by a bale of goods and knocked out of a second-story window and received serious injury.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 2.—Fire broke out in Hon. David Mills' residence about 4 o'clock this morning, badly damaging it. Loss covered by insurance.

It Was His Last Jump.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—This afternoon Charles McCaffrey, the Canadian bridge jumper, jumped from the Shears at the Atlantic Works, East Boston, into the water, a distance of 150 feet. He struck on his stomach and was killed. He had been giving exhibitions here and said this was to be his last jump before going to New York to jump from the Brooklyn bridge.

Bound to Have a Railway.

PORT BURWELL, Aug. 2.—Vienna, Port Burwell, Bayham and Houghton people are bound to have a railway. They have taken hold of the situation with a determination which shows that they mean business. Last Thursday a deputation went to Port Burwell to talk bonus. They were met by all the leading people, headed by the band, and the village was decorated with all the flags that could be found. A meeting was held in the afternoon, when several gentlemen made speeches, all greatly in favor of the scheme. It was decided to at once submit a bonus to the people of Bayham for $35,000, also for smaller amounts in Vienna, Houghton and Malahide and Tilsonburg.

A Terrible Ordeal.

A party of three gentlemen were seated at a table of a popular cafe the other evening, discussing the case of a friend who had recently been through a terrible surgical operation, when one of the party, who had had a similar operation performed on him some years ago, observed: A man who is about to undergo a difficult surgical operation experiences something of the same feeling that a man must experience who is about to be executed. I know it was so in my case. I had nerved myself, I thought, for the terrible ordeal, and had the assurance of my family physicians that the odds that I would come through all right were largely in my favor, and yet, when I entered the operating-room and saw the table, the large bags used in administrating the anaesthetic and, most frightful of all, the surgeon and his assistants with their aprons tied under their chins—I have faced death in battle and I don't think there is a drop of cur-blood in me, but my heart quailed at this sight and it took all my fortitude to enable me to mount the table. I tried to be brave while the assistance arranged me for the anaesthetic, but, do what I would, the feeling that I was about to part with my life could not be banished, and as I said before I then experienced a something akin to the pang of death."—New York World.

Self-Control in Children.

A child who is trained to self-control—as a child may be—is already a true man in his fitness for manly self-mastery. A man who was not trained in childhood to self-control is hopelessly a child in his combat with himself, and he can never regain the vantage-ground which his childhood gave to him in the battle which they opened before him, and in the thick of which he still finds himself. It is a child's earlier struggles with himself that help can easiest be given to him, and that it is the greatest value for his own developing of character. Yet at that time a child has no such sense of his need in this direction as is sure to be his in maturer years; hence it is that it rests with the parents to decide, while the child is still a child, whether the child shall be a slave to himself or a master of himself; whether his life, so far, shall be worthy or unworthy of his high possibilities of his manhood.—Sunday School Times.

THE TORONTO BUDGET.

MONEY BYLAWS TO BE PRESENTED TO RATEPAYERS.

Fined for Kissing a Girl—Charged with Indecent Assault—The 28th Election Petition—A Grand Trunk Conductor Killed—Robbed on the Empress.

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—There are seven bylaws to be presented for the endorsation of the ratepayers of Toronto to-morrow, aggregating a total of $729,258, outside of the University grant, $390,000. The three more important are the Waterworks Improvement, $329,770; General Permanent Improvements, $160,283; and the Parks Improvements, $79,340. The other items are $10,000 for the Howard memorial, $39,909 for Boys' Industrial School and $39,909 for Girls' Industrial School.

At the Police Court yesterday Thomas Rossiter, aged 57, giving his address as 96 William-street, was charged with indecently assaulting a young girl named Effie Pearl, who resides with her parents in the same house. The offence consisted of defendant putting his arms around the child's neck while meeting her in the passage on Sunday morning and kissing her against her will. Col. Denison told the accused that he must be taught that the law forbids any person, old or young, kissing little girls against their will, and fined him $1 and costs or 30 days.

William J. McLeod, laborer, was arrested yesterday afternoon charged with indecent assault. It appears that McLeod took Lilla, the 7-year-old daughter of his landlady, Mrs. Porter, 334 Front-street, to the Island with him, and while there induced the child to accompany him to a secluded spot, where he attempted the outrage. The child's screams attracted the attention of people in the vicinity and he was handed over to P. C. Wallace.

The 28th election petition was filed at Osgoode Hall yesterday in the shape of a cross-petition against David Porter, the Reform candidate who was defeated by John George. Mr. George's election was petitioned against some time ago.

Conductor Walter Powell, one of the oldest employes on the Grand Trunk, met with an awful death yesterday afternoon at Little York. Mr. Powell was attached to the Kingston mixed which leaves Toronto for the east at 12¾. His train reached Little York about 1 o'clock, remaining there five minutes. Conductor Powell, as the train slowed up, jumped from the rear coach toward the west end of the platform and walked along between the rails to the station for orders. He did not perceive the pilot engine, which was passing east at a rapid rate, behind him. Powell took a slanting walk towards the platform, and the moment he placed his foot across the rail, the engine struck him, cutting him in pieces.

Police Magistrate Denison has written to Mayor Clarke saying that he will refuse to accept any portion of his salary until he is paid in full.

A Louisville (Ky.) lady was relieved of $60 and her tickets on the Empress of India last night.

Coroner Powell yesterday afternoon, at M. McCabe's undertaking establishment, opened an inquest on the body of Thomas Butler, who died suddenly in the office of Dr. Wallwin the preceding night. Mr. Robert Fraser was foreman of the jury.

The only evidence taken was that of Vincent T. Bero of Queen-Dundas-streets, brother-in-law of the deceased; Dr. Wallwin, in whose office deceased died, and Dr. Primrose. The result of the post-mortem was not made public, but the coroner announced that Drs. Teskey and Wilberforce Aikins, who conducted it, and who had made a thorough examination, had informed him that all the organs were in a healthy state and there was no apparent cause for death discovered.

It was decided to adjourn the inquest until Monday, Aug. 11, and Coroner Powell will meantime submit the facts to the Attorney-General's department, with the request that the stomach be analyzed.

The burial certificate issued by Coroner Powell ascribed death as being due to narcotic poisoning, the testimony leading to this deduction.

The remains will be taken to Cobourg for interment via G.T.R. this morning. Deceased was only 21 years of age.

The Windsor Boodle Investigation.

WINDSOR, Aug. 4.—Judge Horne's chambers were crowded this morning with citizens who came to bear evidence in the Dougall-avenue boodle sewer investigation. The charges are to the effect that John Harman and Patrick Egan, councillors of the town of Windsor, together with Joseph Degurse, town engineer, and B. G. Davis, a town employe, conspired and agreed together to obstruct and defeat the awarding of a contract to Contractor Mangan by intimidation of bondsmen, and that they were actuated by corrupt and improper motives. Several witnesses gave their testimony to-day. The investigation will occupy several days.

A Strike Nipped in the Bud.

MONTREAL, Aug. 4.—The firemen on the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Company's steamer Corsican struck work this morning upon their demand of an increase from $25 to $30 a month being refused. Under threat of arrest they returned to work before the firemen of the other ships joined them.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

TURKESTAN'S RAPIDLY DEVELOPING COTTON TRADE.

The Approaching Russian Military Manœuvres—The Proceedings at the Medical Congress in Berlin—Measures to Prevent the Spread of Cholera.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 3.—General von Kovsky, Minister of War, is increasing the means of transportation on the Caspian Railway. The rapid development of the cotton trade of Turkestan has resulted in a complete blockade of the depots along the line, the railway not having the facilities for transporting the cotton.

Over 100,000 troops will take part in the military manœuvres to be held before the Czar in Volhynia in September. Emperor William will arrive at the Peterhof Aug. 24. He will remain for three days and will return by sea to Germany.

The Doctors at Berlin.

BERLIN, Aug. 4.—Professor Virchow, president of the Medical Congress, made the opening address. He expressed the Emperor's sympathy with the objects of the congress and said Germany would devote herself to science and humane effort. Two thousand four hundred Germans and 2500 foreign doctors, including 400 physicians from America, are present. Herr Von Boetticher made an address welcoming the delegates on behalf of the German States and Dr. Von Gossler welcomed them on behalf of the educational department. An address welcoming the delegates to Berlin was read by the burgomaster.

Another Mine Explosion.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—The mines at St. Etienne, at which the explosion occurred to-day, first took fire and the explosion followed. Twelve men were injured. The pit is known as the Ville Bœuf pit.

To Check Cholera.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—The Senate to-day voted 100,000 francs for establishing frontier posts to prevent entry of cholera into France.

France's Ultimatum.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—France has sent an ultimatum to Dahomey demanding the cession of Kotonou and Whydah. If the demand is rejected an expedition to be composed chiefly of Senegalese Arabs will start for Abomey in October.

A DON JUAN'S FIVE WIVES.

Dozens of Women Victims of His Blandishments—Revenge At Last.

CHICAGO, Aug. 4.—Charles Loring, locked in the Court House jail here on a charge of bigamy, is accused of having five living wives, and the full list includes the names of a dozen women who have fallen victims to his blandishments. Thirty years of age, well educated, handsome and of excellent family, Loring has made a record scarce second to that of Don Juan.

He met Esther E. Batasco, a beautiful, dark-eyed Jewish maiden, who lived in Brighton, England, and in 1884 he married her. She is in Chicago now, intent on his punishment. She tells how she met Loring and married him in opposition to her parents' wishes. He told her he was in the employ of the telephone supply company and possessed a fortune of $150,000.

Loring then became entangled with a young woman in St. Paul and left his wife. He came to Chicago and secured a position with the Lake View Electric Light Company and established his wife in a comfortable home in that suburb. Just around the corner lived Aurelia Anderson, a handsome and accomplished blonde, with whom he eloped. They were married on Aug. 11, 1889. About the same time the Lake View Electric Light Company missed $1500 which had been in Loring's hands.

Mrs. Loring No. 1 heard nothing of her husband's whereabouts. She was penniless, and managed to secure a position where she makes a comfortable living. Meantime Loring tired of his second wife, and one day last fall left her without warning or means of support. He returned to Brighton, England, where he married Miss Batasco.

Here he met Miss Florento E. Winfield, a prepossessing young lady. He fascinated her and her parents with his captivating manners and tales of great wealth, and finally on the day Miss Winfield's brother was married Loring and his latest love, after acting as best man and maid of honor, were themselves married.

She prepared to accompany him to America, but at the last moment it was discovered that the expected draft from Loring's American partner had not arrived. The new father-in-law pawned his jewelry for $150 and loaned the amount to Loring, who, with his bride and a ten-year-old girl, sailed for New York.

For a time they stopped at the best hotels and revelled in luxury, but finally Loring struck a streak of bad luck. His wife No. 3 pawned her wedding ring and a charity organization supported them. He subsequently left her destitute and fled to Denver.

Meanwhile Mrs. Loring No. 1 got on her false husband's track. She discovered his escapades with Miss Anderson and Miss Winfield, and also discovered that he had a family in Wheeling, W. Va., and another in Montana. Neither of these wives has been definitely located.

Through Loring's father his whereabouts were discovered, and Mrs. Loring No. 1 concocted a scheme to have her revenge. Wife No. 3 was sent for and came to Chicago. Then a despatch was sent to Loring saying that Polly (No. 3) was dying, and having inherited some money, wanted to give it to him. Polly's deathbed was located at the corner of School and Forty-third-streets where Loring sought her. There he was told his wife was in the hospital, where the lady of the house agreed to accompany him. He was then arrested.

Fired by Lightning.

BEAVERTON, Aug. 4.—About 2½ this afternoon during a thunderstorm a barn belonging to John J. McRae, lot 13, 2d concession Thorah, was struck by lightning and consumed together with its contents. The premises were occupied by Henry Dawson, whose loss is about $250, no insurance. The barn was insured in the London Mutual for $400, which does not cover the loss.

The Carpenters' Convention.

CHICAGO, Aug. 4.—The United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America met in biennial convention here to-day with over 200 delegates present. President D. P. Rowland of Cincinnati occupied the chair.

Attempted to Desert.

NEWPORT, R.I., Aug. 4.—Twenty-four British sailors attempted to escape from their ship here to-day, stealing the ship's boat. A crew sent in pursuit shot one, cut another's finger with a cutlass and captured all but three in the act of landing.

THE ARGENTINE CRISIS.

Portfolios Refused Under Celman—England Protects German Interests.

BUENOS AYRES, Aug. 4.—General Roca and Senor Costa, to whom were offered the portfolios of the Ministry of the Interior and the Ministry of Education respectively, have declined to accept office in President Celman's cabinet.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—At the request of the German Government England has ordered her men-of-war at Buenos Ayres to protect the interests of Germans.

Sullenly Refused.

BUENOS AYRES, Aug. 4.—Celman offered the city practical autonomy, which was sullenly refused.

Celman's Predicament.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The Times' despatch from Buenos Ayres says: Vice-President Pellegrini threatens to resign. Celman has offered every post in the Cabinet to opposition leaders, but each has declined the offer. The officers of regiments recently opposed to each other now fraternize and declare that henceforth the troops will be united. The naval officers have resumed their commands. Policemen and firemen defend Celman's house against a surprise by the army.

The Central American War.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 4.—A San Salvador despatch says Gen. Tranguray at the head of the Guatemalan revolutionists has taken Chiquimula, near the capital, and this has obliged the Guatemalan Government to concentrate troops toward the capital. A Guatemalan despatch denies that an attempt was made to assassinate President Barillas and says the revolution is unimportant. It also says Minister Mizner's correspondence has not been tampered with and the Minister for days has been in free communication with the United States Government. A special from Guatemala says: The diplomatic corps has offered to negotiate in the interests of peace. The offer has been accepted and it is expected a peaceful settlement will be arranged within a few days.

TRADE AND TRAFFIC.

Leading Features of the Grain and Produce Markets At Home And Abroad.

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—The wheat and corn crops do not promise to be as large as those of last year, but the prices will likely be at such a point that farmers will do better this year than last. In 1889 corn sold at 44c a bushel in New York, and now the price is 50c. Wheat sold at 85c this time last year, and now it sells at 96c. Last year oats were 28c and now they are sold at 38c.

There is a fair demand for flour, but prices are little changed. Extra is quoted at $4.20 to $4.25, and straight roller, $4.40 to $4.50, Toronto freights.

Wheat is in good demand; white 97c on Northern; spring, 98c to 99c on Midland.

The supply of eggs has not increased and prices are about as formerly quoted. From 15 to 17c. is the average, the former price being paid and the latter asked.

The supply of butter is fair. Round lots of good tub are bought at 12c. and sold at 14 and 15c.

The supply of pork is scarce, and $6.50 to $7 is paid per cwt.

CHEESE MARKETS.

Little Falls reports: There was a liberal sale of cheese yesterday and the market is in fully as good shape as a week ago. The shrinkage of milk is represented to be nearly one-third from the flush of the season and the cheeses are sold off to about July 12. Transactions were: 88 lots at 7c, 7 lots at 7⅛c, 30 lots at 7¼c, 5 lots at 7⅜c, 3 lots at 8c, 1 lot at 8⅛c, 14 lots on commission. There were also 1695 boxes of farm dairy cheese sold at 7c to 8c, mostly at 7½c to 7¾c. Sales of 34 packages of creamery butter were made at 17c, and 14 of farm dairy at 16c to 17c.

Utica reports: The cheese market yesterday recorded another decline, and the salesmen are inclined to feel blue regarding the prospects. There appears to be no active demand at present, and there seems to be no likelihood of improvement in the immediate future. The dry weather of the past several weeks has affected the pastures, and there has been quite a shrinkage in the production of milk. Transactions: 12 lots, 1298 boxes, at 7c; 79 lots, 6638 boxes, at 7⅛c; 22 lots, 2377 boxes, at 7¼c; 31 lots, 2638 boxes, at 7⅜c; 9 lots, 880 boxes, at 7½c; 2 lots, 300 boxes, at 7⅝c; 9 lots, 880 boxes, at 17¾c; two lots, 380 boxes, at 7¾c; 18 lots, 1657 boxes, on commission. Total 163 lots, 15,094 boxes, ruling price 7⅜. Transactions same day last year aggregate 17,982 boxes, ruling price 8c.

BIRCHALL'S DEFENCE.

Eminent Counsel Retained by Benwell's Alleged Murderer.

WOODSTOCK, Aug. 4.—Mr. George T. Blackstock, Q.C., has been retained as senior counsel for the defence in the Birchall case, says The Sentinel-Review. Messrs. Hellmuth & Ives of London will act as second counsel. Messrs. Finkle, McKay & McMullen of this town have also been retained for the defence. A cablegram was received from Mr. Blackstock from Brighton, Eng., on Saturday night, signifying his acceptance of the retainer. Detective Bluett will remain in town until the trial is over.

CRICKETERS FOR ENGLAND.

America's Best Representatives to vie With the Britishers.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 4.—An American cricket team will visit the British Isles next year to contest for the supremacy of the grand old game. Ernest H. Crowhurst, representing The Philadelphia Inquirer and The New York World, is now on his way to England as America's representative Mr. Crowhurst carries with him letters of introduction from officers of the local cricket clubs and committees, and also from the most prominent cricketers of this city and New York.

An outline of the proposed tour shows that the team will be away all of next season. Mr. Crowhurst has been instructed to arrange a full series of matches such as is now being played by the Australians. This includes three matches with All-England, two with the Gentlemen of England, two with the Players of England, two each with the North and South of England and with the Marylebone Club and one each with the counties of Yorkshire, Nottingham, Surrey, Gloucester, Middlesex, Sussex, Kent, Lancashire and the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. Matches will also be played with Lord Sheffield's and Lord Lonsboro's elevens and with the Gentlemen of Ireland and Scotland. The tour so far as arranged will occupy about twenty weeks.

Monday Baseball.

PLAYERS—Buffalo 3, Boston 5; second game, Buffalo 2, Boston 7; Pittsburg 14, Brooklyn 11; Cleveland 6, Philadelphia 5; Chicago 3, New York 2, 14 innings.

Garment Workers in Council.

ROCHESTER, Aug. 4.—The fifth annual convention of the garment workers of the United States and Canada was opened at the New Osborne House in this city this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

NATURAL GAS GUSHERS.

THE PROVINCIAL COMPANY'S EXTENDED OPERATIONS.

The Wells in the Niagara Peninsula—Immense Output from the Completed Bores—What a Well is Like—Future of Natural Gas.

PORT COLBORNE, Aug. 4.—The Provincial Natural Gas, Light and Fuel Company (limited) has exclusive drilling rights over 48,000 acres of 75 square miles of land in the southern and eastern parts of the county of Welland. Although operations were commenced scarcely more than a year ago there are now 10 wells completed, with a combined capacity of 22,000 feet per day. There are also two wells approaching completion and another about to be commenced.

Of the ten wells which have been drilled eight are good producers. The wells are about a mile apart. The centre of the group is 21 miles from Buffalo, 13 miles from Niagara Falls, 19 miles from St. Catharines, 45 miles from Hamilton, and about 60 miles in a straight line from Toronto. The cost of piping is about $7000 a mile. An important factor in conducting gas great distances is the pressure it has at the well. So far the gauge has shown a rock pressure of over 580 feet to the inch.

The company commenced drilling in July, 1889, in the township of Bertie, on the farm of Philip Zavitz. The well was continued to a depth of 846 feet, when a flow equal to 1,700,000 cubic feet per day was obtained, with a rock pressure of 525 pounds. The second well, which is about half a mile north on Elmon Zavitz's farm, was not so successful. Drilling was stopped at 651 feet below the surface. This well produces 400,000 feet a day, and has a rock pressure of 540 pounds. About a mile to the west, in the township of Humberstone, the third well was sunk on Jonas Zavitz's farm. The capacity of this well is 700,000 feet per day. It has a rock pressure of 510 pounds, and is 836 feet deep. The farm of J. A. Ramsden was chosen as the site for the fourth well. Better results were obtained here. The capacity of the well is 2,000,000 feet. It was continued to a depth of 876 feet and has 550 pounds pressure. The fifth well is a "gusher." It is in the township of Bertie, on the farm of Daniel T. Zavitz. The output of this well reaches the enormous figure of 7,000,000 feet per day, more than three times the total daily consumed in Toronto. It is a remarkable fact that the rock pressure of this well is lighter than some of the less productive, being 510 pounds to the inch. The depth is 843 feet. To compensate for this success the next well was a total failure, and has been abandoned by the company. The seventh, which is on the farm of Adam Smith, Humberstone, produces 2,600,000 feet, and has a depth of 840 feet. A second failure occurred on the farm of J. A. Barnhardt, Bertie, and the well was abandoned. The ninth well, situated on Daniel Near's farm, Humberstone, yielded 2,400,000 feet at a depth of 851 feet. Well No. 10, the last that has been completed, is another "gusher." It blows 600,000,000 feet a day from a depth of 872 feet. Drilling is now in operation on the farms of C. Bitner, Bertie, and Trout Brothers, Humberstone. Both these wells are nearing completion. The thirteenth well has been located on the farm of Abram Michael, and drilling will be commenced shortly.

The average gas well in this region is a hole in the ground 5¾ inches in diameter and about 850 feet in depth. There is a close-fitting iron casing to a depth of 650 feet, and a heavy rubber packing at the outside edge of the lower end. The casing and rubber packing are inserted for the purpose of preventing water in the upper strata from finding its way into the well. There is inside of the casing an iron tube through which the gas is conducted to the surface. This tube varies in size according to the capacity of the well. The whole is anchored down by means of heavy cross beams fitted into the rock near the surface. The time occupied in drilling a well is about a month. The work is done by steam power generated in boilers which use natural gas for fuel. A derrick 75 feet high affords support for an immense walking beam. Attached to this is a rope which passes over a pulley and lifts the drill, a bar of steel forty feet in length. The work is carried on night and day. The average progress is 25 to 35 feet per diem, according to the nature of the strata penetrated.

Not only in Canada, but the world over, may the development of natural gas be said to be in its infancy. In the initial stages of the industry there has been much loss of labor and waste of gas, which experience is showing to be unnecessary. The chief drawback is the uncertainty as to the life of a well. Although it has been pointed out that a well at Port Colborne has been flowing gas for twenty-six years, it must be borne in mind that the flow has decreased very considerably since gas was first tapped. It is believed by scientists that there is an abundant supply for many years to come in the gas fields now known, should proper restrictions be adopted.

A FREE FIGHT.

Italians at Bound Brook (N.J.) Engage in a Fatal Quarrel.

BOUND BROOK, N.J., Aug. 4.—A terrific fight occurred in the Italian settlement known as the "gravel pit," in the outskirts of Bound Brook, yesterday. Several years ago an Italian girl came to this country and began to work in the Bound Brook mills. She was engaged to a lover in Italy, but in a short time was married to one of the Bound Brook Italians. Yesterday a brother of the jilted lover visited Gravel Pit and met the faithless woman, who carried a child in her arms. He struck her over the head with a bottle. The husband interfered, and in a moment the two men where fighting. A free fight followed. The occupants of the shanties all turned out and fought viciously. All sorts of weapons, including heavy pieces of split railroad ties, spades, shovels, pickaxes and knives, were used. In a few minutes the ground was covered with bleeding and groaning victims. During the night two of the wounded men died in great agony. Others are in a dying condition. Five arrests were made.

Drowned at the Beach.

HAMILTON, Aug. 4.—While bathing at the beach Sunday afternoon Max ("Slick") Bradt got beyond his depth and was drowned. He was an employe of Contractor Nicholson on the Grand Trunk spur line, and at the time of the drowning was with a son of his employer. Neither of the men could swim. The drowning occurred not 25 feet from shore. Capt. Armstrong recovered the body. Bradt has relatives in St. Catharines. He was married, his wife being on a visit to Buffalo.

NEW YORK, Aug 4.—It is now stated that four of the crew of the government Dredge Advance, which was sunk in the harbor yesterday by the steamer Norje, are missing, two of whom are known to be drowned. The [illegible] are supposed to have escaped by climbing [illegible] the steamer.

The Daily Review.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 5, 1890.

CANADA'S "FRIEND."

The utterances of Mr. Erastus Wiman, of New York, are of interest in Canada because he has forced himself upon the attention of Canadians and has obtained the aid of a political party here to enforce his views in the Parliament of the Dominion. His tongue is not long silent, and when he has no audience to listen to his addresses on his pet theme he uses his pen and by that means addresses still larger audiences. He has announced that next year he will make a pilgrimage through Canada in a carriage delivering addresses on unlimited reciprocity, but in the meantime he is not idle. In the current number of the North American Review he has an article with the strongly suggestive title "How to Capture Canada." The fisheries and seal difficulties have caused some warlike talk, and this furnishes Mr. Wiman for an occasion, the object he wishes to accomplish being the same as the jingos have in view, although he would adopt different methods. He is, of course, addressing a United States audience, and he does not try to allay any fears aroused by jingo misrepresentation, for he says:—

"With armed cruisers in the St. Lawrence watching the fishermen of the United States, who are compelled to take out licenses from a foreign government to authorize them to pursue their peaceful vocation; with the assembling of a fleet of armed vessels from both countries in Behring Straits to detect or protect Canadian sealers; with rumors of great military preparations and increase of defensive armament; the arrival of torpedo boats; the construction of the Bermuda cable, justified only by war purposes; and other unusual movements in times of peace, it is no wonder that the people of the United States are somewhat startled, and that the question is asked, 'Has not the time for the capture of Canada come?'"

It is worthy of note that this "friend" of Canada, who at times, when on missionary tours in this country, calls himself a Canadian, thinks the fact that Canada will not allow foreigners to steal its fish, without permission or payment, a sufficient cause for the "capture" of this country, and is also dissatisfied because in the Pacific ocean means are taken to protect Canadian sealers. He goes further, for he cites imaginary preparations for war to arouse the Americans to the necessity of capturing this country. No billegerent movements have been made on this side by British or Canadian authorities, but this does not deter Mr. Wiman from trying to make the people in the Republic believe that startling movements have been made which they should resent. Having gone so far as to show, in a manner apparently satisfactory to himself, that Canada must be captured, he proceeds to unfold his plan for accomplishing that object. He says:—

"No one dreams of war for this purpose. No other two nations have interests so identical, and there are none whose future is so wrapped up in each other's peace and prosperity, as Great Britain and the United States. There never was less inclination apparent among any people than among those of the United States for the acquirement of additional territory by the aid of the sword. There is, however, a great desire—nay, a great necessity—for an expansion of their trade to continental dimensions, and if Canada can be commercially captured by the peaceful means of policy, it is a clear duty to capture her in that way. If the enormous resources of this 'Greater Half of the Continent' can be made tributary to the progress of the United States by legislation, by occupancy through individual purchase, by development, and by the creation of a mutuality of interests, it would seem to be the very best form of statesmanship to achieve that result. The time and the circumstances are extremely favorable to accomplish this purpose, and if the military preparations have the effect of directing attention to the question of the possibility of a peaceful capture, they will not have been in vain."

As a United States citizen Mr. Wiman's conclusion may be very satisfactory, that it would not be in vain if Canada could peacefully be made tributary to the progress of the United States. From an American point of view that would doubtless be a gratifying thing to accomplish, but why should Canadians wish to become tributary to the progress of the Republic or captives of that country? Mr. Wiman is right in saying that Canada has enormous resources, but he is much mistaken if he believes that this country has no use for them, wishes to get rid of them or is desirous of enriching the United States with them. Canadians have a desire to build up a country of their own, and they look upon these enormous resources as a foundation for their country's development and not as tribute to be sent away. From the point of view of a citizen of the Republic the proposed commercial capture of this country may be statesmanlike and if carried out entitle its author to honors under the stars and stripes, but from a Canadian point of view it is a hostile proposal that can only be rejected.

Mr. Wiman, when he comes to Canada, comes with fair words, but when at home he speaks his mind, and his fair words are shown to be delusive and his plans to be snares laid openly in the sight of the bird.

SOME SCIENTIFIC TALK.

WHAT ELECTRICIANS ARE DOING WITH THE SUBTLE FLUID.

New Uses for Electricity—Latest Application for Theatrical Purposes—The Electric Microscope—Motors and Express Trains—Some New Inventions of a Startling Nature.

An interesting application of electricity for theatrical purposes was made in connection with the ballet in "Ascanio," Saint-Saen's new work at the Paris opera. This was the torch carried by the genii. It was of very limited dimensions, and had to be kept alight for a quarter of an hour each evening. An incandescent lamp was concealed beneath the "jeweled" torch head and a small battery was placed in the staff. In lighting the torch the dancer who took the part of Phoebus and carried the genii's torch applied thumb pressure to a spring in the handle, when the connections were formed and the lamp was lighted. The batteries were daily charged at the electrical station to the opera.

At the electrical exhibition at St. Louis it is intended to illustrate very fully the remarkable progress which has been made in the application of electricity for heating purposes. Among other devices there will be ordinary looking flat-irons to which flexible cord is attached, and to which the heat can be instantly transmitted by a slight pressure. Soldering irons with similar connections can be heated without any waste of time, and the usual firepot can be dispensed with. Tea kettles, cooking dishes, tin pans, and every description of culinary articles can in the same way be placed anywhere, and their contents boiled or baked in the time ordinarily taken in lighting a fire. Portable radiators will also be on exhibition, which can be carried with the greatest ease from one room to another and which, when connected, will warm the apartment. Supplementing this exhibit there will be a number of improved thermostats or temperature controllers, by which the temperature of a room can be instantly regulated.

The tendency of a large number of late electrical inventions is toward the lightening of household labor. A miniature pumping plant for domestic use has now appeared with no more current than is required for a couple of incandescent lamps, will pump 100 gallons an hour. The pumping plant is entirely automatic and requires no attention. A float in the tank is provided with a switch by which the motor and pump are started when the water in the tank is low and automatically stopped when the tank is full.

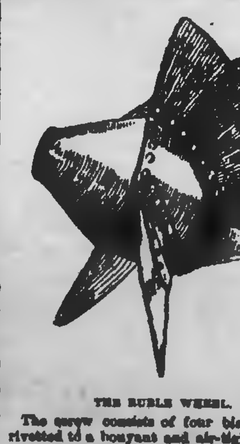
A journal in Chicago some time ago offered prizes for the best three projects for emphasizing the success of the world's fair in that city. Two of the proposals which have been submitted involve the use of electricity. One inventor contemplates the building of a tunnel of thick glass far out into the lake, and its illumination so that the water can be seen for a considerable distance and the effect of an immense aquarium be secured. Another inventor proposes the erection of two towers, each about 400 feet high, at a considerable distance apart, and the construction between them of an aerial electric railroad. A road of this kind is about to be built at Zurich, between two hills about a quarter of a mile apart.

The electric microscope promises to make some wonderful revelations in the world of science. At a recent medical congress in Europe, microscopical preparations under a magnifying power of 11,000 linear were made visible to an assemblage of 500 persons. The pulsating heart of a dog and the heart beats produced by suffocation were successfully demonstrated.

MR. RUBLE'S WHEEL.

He Thinks He Can Get 23 Knots with One-fifth of the Ordinary Power.

On the stocks at the west end of the Erie bridge in Newark's, a new propeller, which the projector thinks will revolutionize navigation in all countries. It is a twin-screw propeller, 100 feet long and 20 feet beam, with an unusually long overhang astern, high bow and shallow draught. The boat is being constructed on plans made by M. R. Ruble, and D. C. Bernard of Newark is doing the joiner work. The frame and planking is unusually strong, as the boat is intended for seagoing excursions, and is to be used by the Atlantic Steamboat Company of Atlantic City in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's excursions. Mr. Ruble is the inventor of a peculiar screw, which he has used successfully on the Ohio River, where he began his experiments.



THE RUBLE WHEEL.

The screw consists of four blades firmly rivetted to a bouyant and air-tight cylinder of boiler iron having conical ends. Two of these screws, each six feet in diameter, will propel the new boat, Mr. Ruble thinks, at the rate of twenty-three miles an hour. The peculiarity of this form of screw is that it is not intended for total submergence, but will lie partly above the surface, one-half or two-thirds being submerged. The inventor says his wheel, running in this manner, will not churn, and will move with the slightest degree of slip while applying the full energy to be developed from a wheel of a given diameter and doing with one-fifth of the power needed to run an ordinary screw. Two 75-horse power Fogg high speed engines will be used, taking steam from a boiler of Mr. Ruble's own designing for which he claims the greatest economy. Owners of steam launches, tugboats, and other screw-propelled craft are watching the progress of the work on the new boat and waiting for the trial which will take place on the Passaic next month.

Mr. Ruble is very confident, and says that he has got beyond the experimental stage, having demonstrated to his own satisfaction the value of the wheels of a steamboat in the West. There he had the wheels [illegible] amidships, and now he will place them under the overhanging stern. The hollow hubs will be calked tightly around the shafts so that no water can get into them.

A Railway Under Water.

The most remarkable short line of railway in the world is probably the submerged railway at Onton, near Bilbao, described in the current part of Chambers' Journal. It runs down an evenly sloping shore in double line to a distance of 650 feet, and has been constructed by a Spanish engineer for the sole purpose of facilitating the shipment of iron ores. The only car is a massive iron tower on wheels in the shape of a pyramid rising 70 feet from the track.—London News.

HOW MILK IS MADE.

From an Address by Prof. Jas. W. Robertson at a Convention of Dairymen at Belleville, Ont.

"After the very amusing address to which you have just listened, filled with sparkling gems of literary value as well as scientific instruction, I find it rather hard to know what to say, because after having your palate tickled with sweet honey, I don't think you will relish a big draught of skim milk. The programme says the meeting is to be on milk and honey." After a little pleasantry regarding the queer ways of bees, the speaker said: I am delighted to have a joint meeting of Beekeepers' Association and the Dairymen's Association, because we have much in common for the good of our country. When in London in 1886, on behalf of the Government, I found no department attract so much attention, provoke so general interest and advertise our country so well as the display of honey. At the same time I recognized that in cut line our main natural advantages arose from the fertile soil and abundance of sunshine. These two facts give me hope that this Province and Dominion will be among the most thickly populated and influential of the strongest nations. Sunshine we can boast of most. We can beat England all hollow in that respect. We therefore can have better products. The plants that the animals need the active work of the bees. They do some of the chores for dairymen. The more we help beekeepers to keep the bees the more milk we will get. If a man recognizes the holiness of labor for the good of the whole race the more he enjoys his work. He becomes a better citizen. I am to look after the dairyman and talk on "How a cow makes milk." A young man at a meeting in Lucan was asked to read a paper—an address on, "Raising a calf and keeping a bee." He dilated so long on the first part of his subject that an old Scotchman rose up and said, "Gude Lord, mon, gie us some honey or sit doon." All the milk of cows is made in a most mysterious way. The elaboration is effected in two glands called the udder. These two glands lie together lengthwise of the cow's body. You can take one gland from the other without rupturing the remaining one; there is no organic or distinct division between the two quarters of each gland. The milk in the gland is elaborated from the blood, a physiological process imperfectly understood. If that be so, and doubtless it is so, it becomes necessary for every dairyman to so treat, feed, water and shelter his cow that she will have wholesome, vigorous blood coursing in her veins. If the nervous system be deranged, then the milk pertains to a low quality. The blood from which the milk is formed enters the glands by two large arteries. Alongside the arteries runs a large vein and nervous cord.

Numerous ducts rise from the milk cisterns at the top of the teats; they spread through the whole structure of the udder. A small portion of the blood exudes or percolates through the membrane that lines these ducts and becomes milk. Beginning from the bottom of the teat, there is an opening which stays closed without any effort on the part of the animal, therefore the milk does not leak. If this muscle relaxes the milk will drop out. At the top of the teat there is another valve over which the cow exercises some control. She can close it and hold the milk above that valve; then a man may tug all he likes and get nothing while the cow holds up her milk. When the cow has this valve closed it is mainly owing to undue excitement. When the cow is much excited the lack of nervous equilibrium will make her close this valve and shut off the milk flow. Sometimes if the cows and the dog try races for home, when the cow is beaten by the dog she becomes excited and holds up her milk.

There are a great many tiny cells on the ultimate follicles of the milk ducts. They are so small that if you measure a row of them not one inch in length, you will find 3,000 or 5,000 of them. They each grow a bud; that bud grow's larger and larger until it becomes a globule; and these globules constitute the fat of the milk. These tiny globules drop and trickle down inside these milk tubes and come with the rest of the milk. The last milk is richer than the first. Some men consider it to be an honest transaction to give factory men the first fruits of the cow and to keep the last quart for the coffee. The law of last session is, a person found guilty of these tricks, adding water, removing cream, holding back strippings, sending in impure milk shall be liable to a severe penalty. I would like to see that law made imperative for the punishment of a great sinners, that the rest might be kept righteous. It is within the province of the Dominion Dairymen's Association, of which a convention is to be held, to look after these sinners for the good of the land. I think I'll say something on that point; I shall help, to look after these right down on the deeds of the good of the rest who makes honest milk. These fat globules are represented here on this chart. There are ordinarily about 1,000,000,000 of these globules in a cubic inch of milk. I drop the remark that there is nothing made in vain in this world. There is no man made in vain in this world; every man has his little or big job to do in life. The man who had the job of counting these globules, without serious thought, would count them one by one. If he spent his lifetime at that, he would require over fifty years' constant application and then not get a very accurate account. If a man would first apply himself with his head, and discover the best way to do his work, he could do it in a scientific way, for 1,000,000,000 could be counted safely by a few hour's effort. Otherwise he might spend fifty years doing what he might do in a few hours. The possible saving of time in this job by thoughtfulness might be forty nine odd years; we are always going hand first, back first, instead of head first. Think how to do things, and then do them in the best way—head first.

ONE MORE DAY.

Kemmler's Electrocution Probably Fixed for Wednesday Morning.

AUBURN, N.Y., Aug. 4.—This afternoon the Associated Press representative asked Warden Durston if it would be safe for a correspondent to absent himself from the vicinity of the prison two or three hours. "Why, certainly," was the response, "and I will say to you frankly that there will be nothing of importance within the next 24 hours." This was said at 4 o'clock this afternoon, hence the warden is authority for the statement that the death bolt will not be loosed at least until 4 o'clock to-morrow.

The execution will probably occur Wednesday morning.

A delicate point of law was to-day suggested here by a gentleman deep in legal lore. This suggestion was not the outgrowth of any personal interest, but is the outcome of careful perusal of the statute under which Kemmler has been sentenced, and of the form of the sentence that directs Kemmler shall be killed in the week beginning Monday, Aug. 4. Here is the point raised: That the week beginning Aug. 4 ends with Sunday. The warden has arbitrary power to defer the execution until Sunday, Aug. 10. On Sunday it is held that the general law would intervene to prevent the killing on that day upon the ground that any execution of legal processes upon Sunday is not legal.

Directly at this point the case is touched by that general principle of law that, if the sentence under which Kemmler is expected to be killed is void in part, it must be wholly void. Brought to a close application the assumption is that if it is illegal to kill Kemmler on the seventh day of the week designated, then it would be illegal to kill him on any other day of the week designated. The situation, it is held, would be different if Sunday intervened as part of seven days, because it would then run with the week and be a part of the seven days constituting the week.

As the case stands the week in which the sentence is to be executed will not be legally complete, because the week ends with a day void in law. Unless there is some general law which may bridge this point which is raised, the entire sentence, it is thought, might be decided null and void.

Blocking the Sidewalk.

For some hours Thursday part of the sidewalk on George-st., between Simcoe and Charlotte; was blocked by the extensive stock of ale being brought in by W. J. Morrow. The stock consists principally of the celebrated White Label, and the number of cars that have come to his address these few months past speaks volumes for the ale. d27w31

Arrested at Perth.

Chief Roszel received a letter this morning from the Chief of Police at Perth, stating that three tramps had been arrested there for burglary and would be tried this week. One of them answered the description given of one of the men suspected of having a hand in the burglary of Messrs. Muckleston & Co.'s hardware store on the morning of June 28th, regarding whom Chief Roszel had sent cards to different places. When arrested they had a British bull dog revolver of 32 calibre, a defender revolver of the same calibre and a razor, articles similar to those taken from Muckleston & Co.'s store. Mr. Loucks, who is with that firm, went to Perth to-day to identify the property.

Why will you cough when Shiloh's Cure will give immediate relief? Price 10c, 50c, and $1. For sale by Geo. A. Schofield, Druggist, Peterborough.

A THIEF ARRESTED.

A Sider of Graham & Co.'s Laundry Caught Leaving Town.

For some time articles have been missed from Graham & Co.'s laundry and the firm has been put to considerable trouble by the disappearances. Customers had missed articles and Graham & Co. had replaced them. Last week quite a number of things disappeared and suspicion fell on Thos. Carruthers, a young man from Toronto, who had been at the laundry for ten weeks engaged in setting up the new machinery which had been brought from Troy, N.Y. An examination of articles in a parcel of his showed that numbers had been erased from them and his initials put on in their place.

Carruthers' engagement closed last week and last evening he was leaving town. He had his trunk taken to the station and was ready to go when Chief Roszel and a member of the laundry firm appeared on the scene. The chief asked Carruthers to open his trunk, and he at first disowned it and then refused to open it, but when he saw that the chief was firm, and would arrest him if he did not comply, he opened the trunk. In it were found many articles which had been taken from the laundry and he was at once arrested and taken to the police station.

At the Court this morning he was charged with having on or about Aug. 1st stolen four silk handkerchiefs, 1 linen handkerchief, 19 collars, 8 cuffs, 5 white shirts, 2 flannel shirts, 1 silk shirt, 4 undershirts, 1 pair of drawers, a night dress, and 3 pairs of socks, the property of Graham & Co., and a pair of gloves the property of James Graham. Mr. G. W. Hatton appeared for the County Attorney.

Carruthers elected to be tried summarily and when asked to plead acknowledged his guilt. He said he was drunk when he took them.

The Magistrate remanded the prisoner until to-morrow for sentence.

Blacking.

Death of Rev. Mr. Pattyson.

Rev. W. M. Pattyson, of Selwyn, died at his residence there on Sunday and was buried this afternoon at Lakefield. Mr. Pattyson was well up in years and had been in the Methodist ministry for many years. He was at one time stationed at Norwood, and having retired for a time from the ministry, on account of waning strength, continued to reside at Norwood. Afterwards he again entered the active work of an itenerant minister. He was a prominent Orangeman, having held the office of Deputy Grand Chaplain, and gave an address at Norwood on the last 12th of July. He has a son, Rev. W. A. V. Pattyson, in the ministry.

Air, Scenery and Fishing.

The Port Hope Times says:—"We notice the return last night of Colonel Benson and Master Bingley Benson from their outing at Buckhorn House, a comfortable hotel at Hall's Bridge, kept by Thomas Eastwood, where they have been enjoying the bracing air, fine scenery and excellent fishing on the back lakes. During one day, shortly before they left, they caught 17 maskinonge and 9 bass, which speaks well for the fishing in that locality. By hiring an Indian guide one has an opportunity of fishing over the best grounds and having all the sport he can wish for. Hall's Bridge, Bobcaygeon and points on Stony Lake being all easy of access, are fast becoming favorite resorts of summer tourists, owing to their many attractions."

Rice Lake.

Gilmour & Co.'s logs have been delivered at Hastings by the steamer Golden Eye. The logs are now running over Hastings dam and the steamer Daisy is towing them to Healy's Falls. The Golden Eye has resumed her trips again.

Dickson Co.'s mill is doing big work, sawing and turning out first-class lumber. There is still another drive to come down the river for this mill.

Harwood is booming.

The G. T. R. train starts to run passengers next Monday if the road gets inspected in time.

The islands are all dotted with camps, and the hotels are full of American visitors.

Fishing is good. Bass are biting well. The maskinonge have all shed their teeth and are beginning to bite freely. It is not generally known that 'lunge shed their teeth in the month of July. Any person examining their mouths in July will find the teeth all loose. So Inspector Gilchrist says! He is having a busy time hunting around all campers to see they have permits. Permits to foreigners have been raised this year to $5 each in waters of the counties of Peterborough, Northumberland, Durham and Victoria.

WORK ON THE STREETS.

Mr. THROOP moved, seconded by Mr. ADAMS,—That the gravel required for Concession-st. north be taken off Euclid-ave.—Carried.

BUTCHERS AND OUTSIDERS.

Mr. GOULD appeared before the Council and asked that a by-law be passed to protect the butchers from outside parties who came in and sold meat in less quantities than the quarter, and they would pay a license. Meat was a perishable article. When meat was dear and nothing was made on it outside parties did not supply the people, but when meat was cheaper they came in.

Mr. WAND said that Mr. Glover did not wish to have a license.

Mr. THROOP said that Mr. Gould had the same chance as others to sell.

Mr. ADAMS said if poor people got cheaper meat by the present arrangements he did not see why the Council should interfere.

Mr. CALCUTT said their was a time that butchers would not stay here until the by-law passed, but it was defective and useless.

The REEVE said he would look into the matter and they could consider it again.

POLES ON THE STREETS.

Mr. AGNEW, Street Inspector, wished to know if the Telephone Companies could put in the poles where they wished?

The REEVE said they could not. They had to ask the Council for permission.

Mr. CALCUTT said the Street Inspector should see that unsightly poles were not put in.

Mr. AGNEW said that they had dug a hole in a boulevard and put a pole in.

The REEVE said it would have to be attended to.

TROUBLE FROM WATER.

Mr. CONNELL asked to have a portion of Concession-st. water tabled.

The matter was referred to the Street Inspector.

A discussion took place regarding trouble from water on Elizabeth-st. It was said that the water came from a drain dug in front of the hospital.

Mr. ADAMS moved, seconded by Mr. THROOP, —That the Clerk be instructed to write to the St. Joseph Hospital authorities with reference to a drain in front of their premises, and the water therefrom causing a nuisance on Elizabeth-st.—Carried.

The Council adjourned for two weeks.

Chemong Park Notes.

Mr. Scott's stage coach is crowded every day. Some passengers were left yesterday, there being no room for them. If this rush continues Mr. Scott will require to put on another coach.

Fishing is good in Chemong Lake. Some nice lunge were caught last week.

Mr. J. G. Weir and "Orangeman."

To the Editor of the Review.

DEAR SIR,—Will you oblige me by giving space to the following letter. It will appear late, but I have been away from home during the past five weeks and had not an opportunity of noticing or replying to articles in the Examiner. In the Examiner of July 4th there appears a letter over the signature of "An Orangeman," which accuses me of subscribing and not paying $5 to the Lakefield Band for their services at the celebration at Port Hope on the 12th of July, 1889, and he accuses me of other things, cowardice, &c., and he thinks if the riot act was being read that I would be found attending to the work on my farm. Now, I think the man is a little off. If he ever had any sense he must have taken leave of it before he signed that letter, for what he has to say is like the letters of J. R. McWilliams and D. M. Moore, in no way connected with the subject first under discussion, that was "The District Orange Lodge at Nassau," and his intention appears to be more like "the snake in the grass" than that of a brother Orangeman, for as to my subscribing $5 to pay the Lakefield Band, every word of it is an invention. I was not one of the committee to provide music; I was not Master, neither was I Treasurer of L. O. L. No. 49, to which I belong; I was not at the celebration at Port Hope on the 12th of July, 1889, and I did not know until the County Orange Lodge meeting in February, 1890, (seven months after), that the Lakefield Band had been engaged, when a member of Lakefield L. O. Lodge called my attention to the fact that L. O. L. No. 49 still owed Lakefield Band $5 and wished me to call the attention of the Treasurer to the matter. He thinks if there was a mob-fight and the riot Act was read I would be a coward and found at home attending to my farm. Surely this is very far-fetched and a great strain on his imagination. If he is looking for cowards, why don't he show up such men as the one who gathered up stones and mud off George-st. and threw them at an old, lame man like Mr. Toker; or the one who provided himself with a horsewhip to abuse a man of Mr. Colbeck's dimension? This would have been a fine opportunity for this "Orangeman" with his riot Act. But this poor contemptible sneak hides himself behind the signature of "An Orangeman," and accuses me of being a coward, when he is too cowardly to sign his own name to his malicious attack. In future I do not intend to pay any attention to the writings of political hacks, and thanking you for space to defend myself, I remain, yours respectfully,

J. GRAHAM WEIR.

A HOLIDAY TRIP.

From Peterborough Westward, on the Way to the Pacific Coast.

BANFF, N.W.T., July 28th, 1890.

DEAR REVIEW,—If you will allow me space in your valuable paper I will try and give you some account of my trip, and perhaps it may be of interest to some of your readers, and if it meets with your approval I will try and give you a letter now and again describing my journey as I pass along.

I will begin right at home. I left Peterborough on the 5 50 C.P.R. train on June 26th, the train being about 20 minutes late owing to an accident just below Peterborough, by running into a farmers team and killing the horses. But now we are fairly off, and the ride to Toronto is very pleasant indeed after the hurry and bustle of getting ready for the trip. We arrive in Toronto O.K. about 20 minutes late, when I am met by my brother and we go up to his place and spend the night with him. The 27th we spent in Toronto, doing the city and call on some friends, and there is always something here to keep one busy and his mind occupied. We were coming down past T. Eaton's & Co.'s store and we were quite amused to see that up a little ally a lot of baby carriages and, of course, drawn there by curiosity, we went forward and found a man there with checks and on making inquiry we found that this man is what we term a hostler, for his business is to receive the carriages and give checks for them. You may be sure he has some picnics, for he told us that he had as many as 50 at a time, so one would be almost led to believe that the baby business is on the increase. But as we were talking to the hostler one of the fair ones came out to claim her carriage and we, of course being rather bashful, took our leave of him and his babies and got down to see something else. Of course one has not long to wait, for behold along rushes the patrol waggon and as it passes we see three policemen and they have two women in the bottom of the waggon holding them to keep them from getting away, and they have about all they want to do, for they don't want to go the police station. We didn't know what was the matter, but we formed our own opinion about it and concluded that it was whiskey brought them there. It was a very sad sight to see women in that state. Then we turn our steps towards home and get some supper and shortly after away to bed. On the 28th we visited West Toronto junction and we find a nice little town for its age, some very large manufactories and others expected, and the place begins to look rather like a city. But the mud is something terrible, it having rained that morning, a little shower, but one would think by the streets that it had rained for a whole day. However, in time all that will be made right when they get the streets block paved. We then got back into the city and took the Credit Valley railway, a branch of the C. P. R., to Wingham for Sunday, a distance of 122 miles, and on our way up we passed through some fine little towns. The first of any importance is Streetsville, a small town on the river Credit, and it is also the junction for the C. P. R., one road going on to Detroit and the other to Wingham. Then we come to Churchville, a very small place, but the home at one time of a man whom all Canada and the States are pretty well acquainted with through the press, one who has worked himself up from a printer boy to a man of position and wealth, and who is quite famous for his lectures on free trade or commercial union, namely Erastus Wiman, Esq. We then pass on to another town, a place where I spent a few years, namely Brampton, the county town of Peel. It contains about 4,000 souls and standing in a section of good farming country. Then away we speed, passing Chetenham and Inglewood. Then we come to the Coledon Mountains, a range of mountains, some of which are quite a height—of course not as high as the ones we have here at Banff, just babies you know compared to them, but pretty good for any one who has never seen the Rockies. But we are soon over them and a few miles on, and we come to Orangeville, a fine town of about 4 or 5 thousand (and, by the way, where the Rev. M. L. Pearson has gone), a pretty lively town and a town with good prospects before it. This it also a junction, one line going to Wingham and one to Owen Sound. We then pass on to Wingham and pass some pretty good towns, namely Mount Forest, Harriston, &c., and then we arrive at our destination about 11.15 forty-five minutes late, and my friend I find waiting for me at the station. We load up and jump into a bus and away we go up to his place and find his charming little wife at the door ready to receive us and I am right welcome. I am tired, as you may suppose, after my long and busy day of walking and travelling about 140 miles. On Sunday, 29th, we of course as usual went to church, and the Methodist church, both morning and evening. The addresses both times were 30 minutes long, the pastor, Rev John Scott, preaching at both services, and very good sermons they were indeed. Oh, say, we had a terrible hot day, it would just about melt one. The sun was just pouring down the heat all day and it seemed almost impossible to get or keep cool. But we got the day in nicely and pleasant, for we had lots to talk about, as old friends always do when they have not seen each other for some time.

On Monday, the 30th, we were up in good time and got around and do the town and call on some men and have a chat with them and find them a friendly lot. The town is about three thousand and just fair, nothing to blow about. It has three good furniture factories running full blast, but the business part is very poor and the sidewalks are the same. The town has been rather dull for sometime, but now it has taken a new lease of life and is beginning to look up a little. There is lots of room for improvement. Having said good bye to our friends at 2 p. m., we are off for Owen Sound. We pass through some very good country and some not so good. From Wingham to Orangeville the crops look pretty good in places and as we pass along we see where the big rain storms have done a lot of damage. Here you see a big wash-out, a bridge taken away, culverts all smashed to pieces, timbers and posts thrown about and one place where the main track is all washed away, but at last we safely arrive into Orangeville where we change cars for Owen Sound. But we stay long enough to get a bite to eat, for it is about 6 20 p.m., and of course we must attend to the inner man, even when we are travelling. Now, while we are waiting for our train, we can take in a few things. Here is where the flood did so much damage on that day which we all well remember, namely, June 5th. Well, we are fairly on our way again and pass through a wild, rough country nearly all the way to Owen Sound. Of course we pass through a few small towns on the way up, but here we are at last in the Sound at 10 p.m. We meet an old chum here whom we have not seen for some time and whom we are very glad to see. We go up to his place and spend a pleasant night with him. On Tuesday, July 1st, we have a fine shower here, but that doesn't stop my friend and myself from taking in an excursion which leaves here for Meaford, a distance of about 25 miles. We get there about noon and spend a pleasant day of it. Meaford is a nice little town of about three or four thousand and has quite a business-like appearance, and of course we have the usual amount of sports, just like some of our big days at home, that is to say, more on the bills, posters and programme than what we see in the field. That was about the way it was here. Well, we left about 5.30 and had a very pleasant sail, and got to Owen Sound in good time. Now, Owen Sound is a smart town of about six or seven thousand and has been pretty quiet until of late, say two or three years since, when the C. P. R. got hold of it. It has taken a new lease of life, for things are almost booming there now. It has rather the look of a young city; good buildings, sidewalks and streets, and the C. P. R. is just now putting in a new dock, and a fine one it is. The harbor is an excellent one, large enough to hold a good many ships, and ships that draw from 14 to 16 feet of water. The Polson Iron Works Co'y have their shops here, also they build large steamships. They have just completed one for the C. P. R. called Manitoba. They told me she was 310 feet long and drew about 15 feet of water and would carry about 1,700 tons—a pretty good load.

Well, here it is about 10 p.m. and we find ourselves on board the steamer Carmona, which leaves in about two hours. And we trust you will not criticise us too much on our letter, as this is our first attempt at writing for the public to read. We will leave you here for the present, just as we are about to start for the Soo, and if all goes well you may hear from me again, when we will take the journey up where we left of and continue it on to about Winnipeg.

Yours truly,

JAY W. DOXSEE.

P.S.—We had the pleasure of meeting the Rev. Mr. Leach, of Peterborough, at Owen Sound. He was on his way to his new appointment, and was there visiting his brother-in-law. We are at present stopping at Banff Hot Springs. We got here last Saturday morning in time for breakfast and may remain all the week. We have fine, cool weather, having to put on good big fires at night, and it feels good to draw up close to the stove. I will tell you about the bathing, mountains, springs, etc., in due time.

THE DUDE.

Some philosophers tell us
Man sprang from the ape
And successive developments
Modeled his shape.

Till at length there remained
Not a vestige or trace
Of resemblance in man
To that time honored race.

And that now they've discovered
A connecting link
Between man and monkey
Is certain they think.

'Tis an imbicile creature,
Of small harm or good,
Which goes by the name
Of the Dudlet or Dude.

To the full form of man
It has fully attained,
But wisdom or reason
It has not yet gained.

And if still this progressive
Improvement goes on,
As time in its flight
Rolls the ages along;

In the far distant future,
It must be confessed,
The poor Dude may with reason,
Like man, be possessed.

But those sages have not Told as yet whether man
Will return to the point
Where at first he began.

For if this be the case,
On the retrograde track
It will take the Dude
But a short time to get back.

KNOW HOW
—TO—
KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders. They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"Leave me alone for that, my lord. I can call help if I want it."

"Are there not places in the city where a body can be hidden?—where it may be so disposed of and never be found?" asked the duke, as the thought came to his mind.

"Never mind," returned the other, with a confident nod of the head. "If I meddle with the matter it shall be well done."

"Very well. I'll trust it with you."

For a few moments after this there was a dead silence, during which only the moaning of the wind could be heard. But at length the duke started up, and with sudden energy he said:

"Ah, Savotano, there is one thing I came nigh forgetting. You have heard of this strange monk—Valdimir his name is."

"Aye—and I have seen him, too. You mean that huge lump of human fat?"

"Yes. And now tell me who and what he is. He was at the duel; and I know he has been here to my house. Who is he?"

"You've cornered me there, my lord, for I can tell you no more about him than I can about the man in the moon. In short no one seems to know him, save that he is a monk, of some Roman order, and named Valdimir. He has been here only a few months, as near as I can find out. And yet I think I know what his business is; or, at least, why he's here."

"And you suspect."

"Yes—and if my suspicions be correct we could have him taken care of at any moment."

"Explain."

"Why—I think he is a spy of the Pope—sent here from Rome to learn something of our Emperor's plans."

"But he has not visited the imperial palace."

"Oh yes, my lord. He has been there several times; and once the Emperor himself was obliged to send him out of the audience chamber."

"But have you any particular reasons for thinking him a spy from the Pope?"

"Why—he is a Romish monk; and he hangs about the most important places in our city. Even the circumstances I have just related—his trying to remain in the audience chamber while private business was going on, and having to be ordered out by the Emperor—is some ground for suspicion. I mean to watch him, at all events."

"That's right," returned the duke. And then, after a moment's thought, he added: "I do not see why he should be around after every petty duel that may be fought, if he is a spy from Rome. And besides, I have heard one or two persons say that they were sure they had seen him before."

"Oh that may be only the result of some strong resemblance which he bears of some one else. I am sure he was never here before—not in Moscow."

Again the humped-backed priest was cautioned about the work he had in hand, and having promised over and over again to be very careful, he took his leave.

And Olga, Duke of Tula, was left alone with his own thoughts. Better for him had that wicked priest been his executioner! Better for him had he been upon the count's bed, racking with pains! Better for him had he been a poor gun-maker, as he had been honest! Oh, better for him had he been the meanest beggar that walked the earth, than what he was! But he did not realize this. He had a goal ahead, and he tried to overlook the black, dreadful gulf that yawned between him and it!

CHAPTER X.

The news went out that the Count Conrad Damonoff must die. A few days before the best surgeon in Moscow said he would recover; but now that same surgeon said he must fall. A strange change had come over him. It was not a fever, but rather a consuming of vitality. He was failing fast, and no art of medicine could revive him. Some thought he must be bleeding inwardly, but others knew better than this, because in that case there would be some outward symptom. The wound itself was healing, but the disease was not. The physician and the priest were now in daily, and the former almost in hourly attendance. The surgeon was Kapani; and the priest was the hump-backed Savotano!

Thus lay the count upon his bed, weak and faint, but at present almost free from pain, and an old woman was his only attendant, the priest having just left. It was just after noon. The dying man had just taken a powerful stimulating draught, though it was against the injunctions of the priest as he said that by such means the invalid might die bereft of sense, and thus lose his hold upon salvation—he had just taken this draught when there was a low rap upon the door. The woman arose to answer the summons. She conversed a few moments with the girl who had knocked, and when she returned to the bed she announced that Raris Nevel wished to enter.

"Let him come in," whispered the count.

"But—"

"Never mind," he interrupted, as the woman commenced thus to expostulate. "Let him come in. By heavens, if he is my enemy let me see him. It may serve to arouse me."

So the woman went to the door again, and soon afterwards Raris Nevel entered the apartment. He stepped lightly, noiselessly, to the bedside, but it was some moments ere he could distinguish objects by the subdued light of the place. By and by, however, he overcame the difficulty, and he started back in horror as he beheld the features of his adversary. How pale and sunken! How deathlike and ghastly! The count noticed the movement and he noticed the look.

"Count Damonoff," spoke the gun-maker, in a low, solemn tone, "a few days since I heard that you were recovering, and I thanked God. But to-day they told me you were dying, and I have come to ask that I may take your hand ere you pass away from earth. As God is my Maker and my Judge, I would rather lie down here and die for you than have you pass away with a curse of me upon your soul or on your lips. Forgive me for what I have done, and never again will I engage in such a wicked work. For my own life it is my country's and my mother's, and I have no right to throw it away; and my antagonist's life is the sacred property of God, which I have no right to touch but in self-defence. Forgive me."

Slowly and heavily moved the dying man over, and then he extended his thin and wasted hand.

"Raris," he said—and his voice was stronger now, for the potion was working—"I am glad you have come—very glad; for I have wished, above all else on earth to see you. I could not send for you, for I knew not how you might come. I have been all wrong in the things that have passed betwixt thee and me. I was mad and a fool. I blame you not; but rather do I thank you for your kindness through all the scene. Oh, I forgive you with all my heart; and now tell me that I am forgiven!"

"Forgiven!" repeated Raris, with a trembling lip, still holding the count's hand within both his own. "Oh, would to God I could call you back to life! Forgiven? Oh, God, who readest all hearts, knowest how humble, how sacred, is my forgiveness to you! Could I call you back—could I wipe the one deed from my memory, I would be content."

"Enough," returned the count, warmly. "This was my hottest wish, though pride has kept its utterance. Oh, I feared that you would gloat over my death—that you would be glad when I was gone."

"No, no! I should have been a monster."

To be continued.

THEY RAWHIDED THE COUNT.

Mrs. Price and Her Sister Beat Gallant Achille Vidal.

CHICAGO, Aug. 4.—Count Achille Vidal, who two weeks ago was nearly pounded to death by Sol Price and the latter's burly brother, received a vigorous cowhiding last evening. The punishment was received at the hands of Mrs. Price and her sister. The Count, who is a notorious gallant, received a daintily written note, signed Marie, making an appointment at 8½ o'clock. He was on hand to meet the fair unknown, when he was confronted by the two women, who began to lay on the rawhides. With a shriek of pain Vidal beat a hasty and ungraceful retreat, closely followed by the women.

A few weeks ago the Count was compelled by Sol Price to take a midair jump from a second story window and later had his beauty disfigured in a fight. Until yesterday the Count had disappeared from public gaze. So had Mrs. Price, whose friskiness had caused all the trouble. Mr. Price sued for a divorce from his wife the day after he forced the gay Count to jump through the window, but it would seem that he has since patched up the difficulty with the gay Mrs. Price, and she has been restored to her old place in his affections. This rawhiding may have been Mrs. Price's affidavit that she is no longer in love with the Count.

DESTRUCTIVE HAILSTORM.

It Is Estimated 100,000 Acres of Manitoba Wheat Are Ruined.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 4.—Fuller accounts of the damage done by the storm on Friday night have been received, and show the loss to the wheat crops to be greater than at first reported. At Deloraine, 200 miles south of Winnipeg, the hail belt is said to have been four townships wide, narrowing down to a mile and a half as it proceeded east, leaving destruction in its wake. Mr. Ogilvie's manager here says that 100,000 acres of wheat have been totally ruined. So far reports have only been received from the principal towns along the Canadian Pacific Southwestern Railway, and it is impossible to say yet just how extensive the damage is, but certainly it is very serious.

A Boissevain despatch says: Yesterday about 12 o'clock the sky darkened like a total eclipse. Half-an-hour later a severe lightning storm began. There was a deluge of water which continued to 22 o'clock. In town glass was once more badly wrecked and the Ryan House was unroofed. Crops are badly damaged south of the track. Very little is destroyed north.

Mr. Shaughnessy's Estimate.

MONTREAL, Aug. 4.—Mr. T. G. Shaughnessy, assistant president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, estimates on the basis of recent telegrams that the Northwest grain crop will amount to 17,000,000 bushels, of which 12,000,000 will be for export.

INCENDIARISM SUSPECTED.

A Mysterious Fire at London East—The Loss Estimated at $10,000.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 4.—Another mysterious fire occurred this morning, which was most disastrous in its results. The watchman at Minhinnick's old oil refinery noticed a blaze proceeding from the roof of Lawrason's lard oil manufactory about 5 o'clock this morning and telephoned to both fire stations and the brigades were promptly on hand, but they were unable to do anything but save adjoining buildings. The proprietors place their loss at about $10,000. They are at an entire loss to account for the fire unless it was incendiarism.

THE NEW BISHOP OF LONDON.

Dean O'Connor of Sandwich Appointed to the Vacant See.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—The Catholic Union has the following cable from Rome:

Rev. Dennis O'Connor of Sandwich, Ont., Superior of the Basilian Fathers, has been appointed Bishop of London, Ont., to succeed Most Rev. John Walsh, who was made Archbishop of Toronto last year.

By decree of the Holy Office the faithful will be allowed the use of fresh meat on Friday, Aug. 15, The dispensation is granted in honor of the feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin.

A Terrible Storm.

HAMMOND, Ind., Aug. 4.—Yesterday's downpour of rain was the heaviest in the history of this section. The damage in the town is great. Huge trees were torn up by the roots and carried away, fences were swept out of existence, orchards obliterated and everything in the path of the tempest destroyed. The rotary velocity of the wind was terrific, and it progressed forward at the rate of sixty miles an hour. The west wing of the building leased by the Chicago Ax Company was blown over and completely destroyed. The roof of the Lutheran church was badly damaged by a falling chimney. The ice house at Wolf Lake, two miles from here, was lifted from its foundation and destroyed, and it is reported several people who sought shelter there were killed and injured. A man named Fisher was struck by flying timbers and had his leg broken and is internally injured.

SHE WANTED JUSTICE.

And, Like Many Others, Went to the Wrong Place for It.

During the closing minutes of the session of the Court of General Term in room No. 4 at the court house yesterday, says the St. Louis Republic, a pale grief-furrowed face might have been seen pressed against the glass panel of the door. The eyes were large and black, but dimmed with excessive weeping, and there were heavy black circles under them. Her dress was black and threadbare. For ten minutes she stared into the court-room, hesitating between fear and inclination. Meantime court had adjourned, the judges retired and all attorneys and loungers went quickly out. Still the woman held her place at the door. Presently some one passed, saw the woman, addressed a word or two to her, and then opening the door for her, said to Clerk Brent:

"A lady to see the judge, Mr. Brent."

"The judge has retired, madame," said the clerk.

"Can't I see him, then?"

"I fear not."

"But could'nt I go to his residence?"

"That depends. Do you wish to see him on legal business?"

"I want to see him about my divorce case," said the woman, breaking down and crying quietly. "He hasn't been fair with me."

"Is your case in court?"

"Oh, I don't know, sir. It was set down for the April term, and it should have come up in April, you know, and now they tell me it's put over till October. My God! I can't wait; I can't wait so long."

"Did you have an attorney?"

"Yes, I had Mr. Blank first and he took all the money I had, $18, and then threw it up when he found I hadn't any more. Then I got Judge —— and he presented my petition, but he's never done anything more, and now he's let them put it over till October. It's cost me nearly $50 already, and that is more than I can save in a year."

"Judge —— wouldn't treat you in that way wilfully. He isn't that sort of man."

"So they told me, but I guess they're all alike," and she wrung her hands pitifully. "You see I haven't any money, and I can't get any relief. And he comes and beats me and robs me and threatens to take little Eva away from me. He says he has the right because he is my husband and I'm not able to care for her properly. But, oh, sir, he can't, can he? Don't you see if it goes over until October it will kill me. And God knows what will become of the baby. What shall I do, sir?"

"There's only one thing. You must get your attorney and come into court and make a showing of these facts."

"And can't I see the judge?"

"No, madam."

"But it isn't right. I don't understand it. I haven't been treated fairly, and if I could see the judge just a moment I know he couldn't refuse me."

"I'm sorry, madam, but it's against orders."

"And I thought there was justice in the courts!" sobbed the woman, as she left the court-room.

How many others have cherished such illusions!

Another Just Like Him.

"Memory is a very treacherous thing," observed a man in a Grand River avenue hotel as a number of guests were sitting about. "Would you believe I couldn't tell who was President when I was asked the other day?"

"You are an exception," replied one of the men.

"I may be, but I doubt it. I'll bet a dollar. I can find a man in this very block whose memory is just as poor."

"A man who can't remember who is President?"

"Yes, sir."

"Name him."

"The grocer above us. Its an even dollar that you may ask him the question and he can't answer it."

The money was put up and the crowd went over. The doubting Thomas was told to act as spokesman, and he said:

"Mr. Blank, what is the President's front name?"

"President! Front name! Why I don't remember to have ever heard it in my life!"

"Who is President?"

"Who! Well, I declare! That's very, very funny. Let's see! Let's see! I give it up."

"You can't tell his name?"

"No. You see, I'm so very, very busy, and its such a trifling thing, and——"

But the stakes were given up in disgust and the crowd retired—all but the two men with treacherous memories.

"Half to you," said the first as he handed over a dollar.

"O K. That's the profit on two crates of berries. What's the next bet?"

"That you can't remember who discovered America."

"All right—bring 'em in. I won't be able to remember that America was ever discovered."

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING
EPPS'S COCOA
BREAKFAST.
By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, by grocers, labelled thus:

A NIAGARA MYSTERY.

SUPPOSED SUICIDE OF A BRANTFORD MAN.

A Coat, Vest and Hat Found in Prospect Park—Cigar Manufacturer Jacob J. Kirschner's Cards and $163 in Money in the Pockets.

NIAGARA FALLS, Aug. 5.—About 6 o'clock this morning Officer McMullen found a brown checked sack coat, a black vest and a Derby hat on the bank of the river in Prospect Park about 300 yards above the American falls. In the pockets were found $163 in money, several small articles and a nickel watch attached to an oxydized silver chain. There were also found four cards bearing the address:

JACOB J. KIRSCHNER.
Dealer and Manufacturer of Cigars,
Brantford, Ont.
Presented by Geo. Kirschner.

Several letters in the pockets were addressed to Jacob J. Kirschner. A letter head of the Palmer House, Toronto, had this memoranda of notes coming due: Nov. 3, $100; Dec. 3, $88.44; Jan. 3, $100. The hat bore the mark of George Glass & Co., Brantford, Ont.

D. Littlefield of the Park Lunch House states that a man wearing the coat found was in the lunch house yesterday and asked for a drink, stating that he was broke. A drink was refused and the stranger said he was going over the falls.

SEARCHING FOR HIS MOTHER.

The Cloud Removed From a Young Man's Name After Many Days.

CHICAGO, Aug. 5.—The members of the Board of Trade have been discussing to-day the romantic story of Claude Rosaire. He is a young man of 27, wealthy and cultured, and has for three years held a position in the Chicago Board of Trade. When a boy he lived with a well-to-do Canadian family in a small town in Southeastern Michigan, never doubting that he was one of the family. In a fit of anger four years ago his supposed father told him that there was a cloud upon his birth, and that night Claude left his home never to return.

An anonymous letter written in French was delivered to him last Thursday, purporting to come from one who was about to die. The letter contained a circumstantial account of his movements after he left home four years ago, showing that the unknown author was familiar with Rosaire's life. The writer then informs him that his grandmother's mother was the Duchess de Saint Allaise of Normandy, who was unhappily married. The duchess and her daughter fled to America and entered the convent of the Ursulines at New Orleans, where five years later the duchess died. The child Victoria remained in the care of the Sisters until the age of 18, when she was allowed to temporarily leave the convent to complete her musical education. She soon met and loved a soldier in the Confederate army, and on Oct. 6, 1863, was married to him and immediately went with him to Canada.

The writer of the anonymous letter says that he never forgave them, for it seems he also loved the convent girl. He says he followed them as would a hunting dog. Three weeks after the birth of their child, which occurred the next year, he stole the babe from his nurse and carried him to the south of Ontario, among a colony of Canadian Friends. The father, crazed with grief, committed suicide. The mother suddenly and mysteriously disappeared, and no trace of her could be found.

The letter declared that Claude Rosaire was the stolen child and inclosed the original certificate of the marriage of his parents.

Mr. Rosaire will make every effort to find his mother and will search all Catholic convents through the country. His interest in the authorship of this letter is overshadowed by his desire to learn the whereabouts of his mother and of the resting-place of his dead father.

HE WANTS JUSTICE.

A Bracebridge Man Kept in Jail 72 Hours Without Food or Water.

OTTAWA, Aug. 5.—A man named McCord, who comes from Bracebridge, has been here for the past two or three days waiting to lay his case before the Minister of Justice or his deputy. To-day he had an interview with Mr. Sedgewick, Deputy Minister of Justice. According to McCord his grievance is a somewhat novel one. He had a dispute with a female relative. Anything but complimentary remarks were exchanged and McCord was brought before a magistrate, charged with abusive language. At any rate the result was that McCord was sent to jail. By some oversight the jailer forgot all about McCord's incarceration, and for three days and three nights the prisoner was left, so he says, in his cell without either food or water, and now his visit to Ottawa is to lay this matter before the justice department so that the jailer may be punished. If justice is to be had in this country McCord is determined to have it. He is somewhat erratic in his talk and his statements are therefore given for what they are worth.

KEMMLER'S EXECUTION EXPECTED BETWEEN DAWN AND DUSK.

The Doomed Man's Parting With Mrs. Durston—Electrician Barnes to be Excluded for Talking to the Newspapers—The Warden's Secrecy.

AUBURN, Aug. 5.—Kemmler's execution has been postponed until to-morrow forenoon, or possibly to-morrow night. The doctors who have been in consultation have returned to their rooms at the hotel and gone to bed.

By exercise of an absolute discretion the prison warden has added two days to Kemmler's life and the second day has closed with clouds and rain. No one besides the warden and his guests, and not all of them, at twilight could tell when Kemmler's death should come. The invited guests have been arriving by train at intervals during the day, the first being the Buffalo contingent, and it is a large one. At its head was Dr. A. P. Southwick, who drew the bill under which this electricizing is to be done. Dr. C. F. McDonald, chairman of the State Lunacy Commission, came during the forenoon. At 11 o'clock most all the witnesses had gone to bed and there was no one around except a few stragglers and the newspaper correspondents.

When the first mail was delivered this morning a letter carrier went to the jail with a letter addressed to "William Kemmler, Auburn Prison, Auburn, N. Y." The envelope bore a special delivery stamp. It was taken to Kemmler and read to him. This letter was from his brother in Buffalo and may be the cause of preventing an autopsy on the body of the murderer after his death. It was a short letter and wound up by asking Kemmler to formally direct that his body be turned over to his relatives immediately after his death. It is said that a letter was received by the warden, also from Kemmler's brother, formally demanding the body immediately after death.

The arrangements of the newspaper reporters here are very complete, and almost everywhere the warden goes he stumbles on a newspaper man or some telegraphic arrangement for getting the news out of town.

The parting of Mrs. Durston and Kemmler last evening brought out more strongly than anything else the stolidity and barrenness of the man's mind. Though Kemmler's crime put him without the pale of ordinary sympathy the warden's wife has throughout shown a deep interest in him and has sought to lead him into the light of religion. In the soft twilight last evening she went down the iron stair way for the last time to see the man whose best friend she had been. Outside the cell door she stopped a moment and viewed the implement of death, the switch-board, the chair with its numerous straps and the cruel-looking wires that seem so small and yet are capable of being charged with such a death-dealing power. Before her eyes shall behold them again they will be famous as having caused the first legal death by electricity. After viewing these things a moment, she stepped into the room where the two men, Kemmler and Fish, are confined.

"I was afraid you would not come to bid me good-by," said Kemmler, "and I was watching to see you go to the depot. How nice it looks outside." Gazing through the little iron-barred window the view was lovely—a fountain tossing its cool spray upward, a sweep of dark green lawn, vines and flowers, and over all the heavens glowing with the last light of day.

Mrs. Durston spoke to him of the beauties of faith, of the better life which he had entered on since coming to the prison and besought him to be brave. Kemmler shed no tears and was calm while the Warden's wife talked of other matters. He promised that in all things he would be true to her teachings. Then she took the doomed man's hand and simply said: "Good-by, be brave, be strong and everything will come right."

What a contrast the two presented. The woman arrayed in soft white garments, and the man in black. She to go out to a world of pleasure, and he to count the few hours until he is called out to die. What man with broader views of life than he that would not shrink under the thoughts that such a parting would awaken. But Kemmler showed no emotion. A little later Mrs. Durston went through the gateway and walked to the depot. Kemmler watched by the window until the train steamed away and then turned to Daniel and remarked: "I am hungry now and want a good supper."

Electrician Barnes of Rochester, who has been working so hard here at the prison on the electrical machine, will not be admitted to witness the execution. This was decided on to-night chiefly because of an interview published in The Rochester Post Express in which Barnes said the man who would pull the lever lived in Auburn.

The generally accepted time for the execution is 6 a.m. Wednesday.

It is now certain that the execution will not take place before morning and may be deferred another day, but this latter is not considered probable.

The Very Latest.

AUBURN, Aug. 6, 4 a.m.—Kemmler's execution will not take place before 5, but it may occur between 5 and 9 o'clock this morning.

THRASHED BY WOMEN.

An Ohio Editor Drubbed for Publishing Scandals.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Aug. 5.—Two large, muscular women, Sue McDonald and Louise Snyder, thrashed Editor E. T. Commins of The Springfield Budget last night. Saturday's issue contained an article reflecting rather severely on the two women named. They saw the article last night, and boiling over with rage went to Commins' office. Finding him in they hesitated not. Commins is a small man, and in their hands was manipulated as easy as if he were a baby. They stood him up in a corner, and while holding him belabored him with their doubled-up fists. They quit when his face was almost like raw beefsteak and his clothes were covered with blood. When released he drew a revolver, expecting a further attack. They went away and left him, however.

Aylmer Votes a $30,000 Bonus.

AYLMER, Aug. 5.—The voting to-day on the bylaw granting a bonus of $30,000 to Hay & Co. of Woodstock, that company agreeing for the above consideration to operate a furniture factory in this town for at least ten years, resulted in the bylaw being carried, 344 to 1. The factory is to employ 25 men the first year, 32 the second year and for the following eight years not less than 35 hands.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 5.—Attorney J. Milton Turner left for New York to-day to arrange for colonizing negroes in Mexico. He says the plan is being promoted by a firm of coffee dealers in New York who have a capital of $5,000,000. The purpose of the firm is to put negroes to raising coffee and sugar.

TORONTO TOPICS.

A Brute to Taste the Cat—A Big Suit Against the City.

TORONTO, Aug. 6.—William J. Macleod, aged 26, was arraigned at the Police Court yesterday morning on the charge of having at the Island the previous day indecently assaulted 7-year-old Lilla Porter, daughter of his landlady, residing at 344 Front-street. Hardly had Macleod been placed in the dock when the handle of an umbrella wielded by a vigorous hand, alighted on his forehead. "Take the man into custody," said the Magistrate who had witnessed the occurrence. The offender was arrested and proved to be David Robins of 773 Queen-street west, the man who discovered the crime and inflicted on the prisoner condign punishment before handing him over to the police. Robins was brought before the Magistrate subsequently, expressed regret for committing a contempt of court and was discharged, Col. Denison thanking him on behalf of the city for the prompt action he had taken in bringing the scoundrel to justice. The charge against Macleod was abundantly proven, and he was sentenced to 23 months in the Central Prison and to receive 40 lashes with the cat-o'-nine-tails, half on entering and an additional 20 two months before the expiration of his sentence.

Hon. Adam Brown, Canadian Commissioner to the Jamaica Exhibition, was in the city yesterday conferring with Mr. Fred Nichols, secretary of the Dominion Manufacturers' Association, as to the best method of drawing attention of manufacturers generally to the desirability of making exhibits.

The Attorney-General has appointed Mr. Æmilius Irving, Q.C., a commissioner to enquire into the numerous complaints that have poured into the Government during the three years that the Lion Provident Life and Live Stock Association has been conducting business. These complaints allege that in some instances no claim whatever was paid, and in other cases that only partial sums of the amount of insurance was handed over.

Randolph Macdonald and Manning & Macdonald, contractors on the Don improvement, have sued the city for $260,623 damages for breach of agreement.

A telegram was received last evening from Muskoka announcing the death by drowning near Port Carling of Vivian Platt, who was one of a number of boys recently taken to Muskoka by Rev. Mr. Smith on a camping expedition. No particulars of the accident are yet to hand. Deceased was about 16 years of age. His mother resides at No. 9 Robert-street.

Roy V. Somerville of Montreal gave the members of the Canadian Press Association some sound advice on retiring from the presidency at the annual meeting of the Association held in the Rossin House parlors yesterday.

Owing to the difficulty generally experienced in securing a large attendance in midsummer it was decided to substitute February for August as the date of the annual meeting.

Committees were appointed to revise the constitution and to fix upon a sliding scale of charges for patent medicine and other foreign advertisements. These officers were elected:

President—A. Patullo, Woodstock Sentinel-Review.
First Vice-President—H. P. Moore, Acton Free Press.
Second Vice-President—J. C. Jamieson, Belleville Intelligencer.
Secretary—J. B. McLean, Toronto Empire.
Assistant Secretary—J. S. Brierly, St. Thomas Journal.
Auditors—A. R. Fawcett, Streetsville Review, and J. Blackett Robinson, The Week.
Executive—L. G. Jackson, Newmarket Era; T. H. Preston, Brantford Expositor; George Trayes, Port Hope Times; A. F. Pirie, Dundas Banner, and R. W. Climie, Bowmanville Sun.

The French Shore Question.

ST. JOHNS, Nfld., Aug. 5.—There is no change in the attitude of affairs connected with the French shore question. Sir William Whiteway is in London with the other Government delegates, but we have no news of their movements. Sir James Winter arrived here yesterday by the Allan steamer. There is no doubt that the delegation to England, of which he was the leader, have done splendid work on behalf of the colony. Their efforts have been successful in bringing the whole matter before the British public and in enlisting the sympathies of the people on behalf of our wronged and suffering population. There are now the strongest grounds for believing that our wrongs will be redressed, and that we shall, if true to ourselves, be able to throw off the French yoke. Sir James Fergusson's attempts at fencing in regard to the illegality of the doings of naval officers, when questioned on the subject in the House of Commons, afford much amusement here, where the real state of the case is known. These officers have acted without any warrant of law, and the British Government will have to pay the damages.

Sir John in Excellent Health.

OTTAWA, Aug. 5.—C. H. Mackintosh, M.P., has just returned from a visit to Sir John Macdonald at River du Loup. He says that the Premier is in excellent health and spirits, dictating numerous telegrams and batches of letters daily. Sir Adolphe Caron is also at River du Loup along with his secretary, Captain Benoit. Sir John is likely to stay at River du Loup until Sept. 15.

Love's Illusions Dispelled.

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—Patrick Thomas Gleason has had a quarrel with his fair one which led him into a curious quandary. He had lavished presents upon her in the days when they lived for each other, but the quarrel caused him to regret that he had squandered so much money, as he now thinks, foolishly. He wanted to regain possession of those presents and accordingly took advantage of her absence at church to invade her boudoir and appropriate them. He was arrested for this, but the girl's father refusing to prosecute he was allowed to depart.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

SALISBURY CANNOT INTERFERE WITH THE CZAR.

Many Monks Perish in the Flames on Mount Athos—The Parnellites to Be Attacked in Their Own Fortresses—Precautions Against Cholera.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—In the House of Commons to-day Sir James Fergusson said the British Government could not interfere with the Czar's treatment of the Jews.

Queen Victoria this evening left Osborne House for a drive to witness the yacht squadron parade at Cowes. Her carriage had to cross a steam ferry on a pontoon. A too sudden letting down of the platform on which the carriage stood caused an inrush of water which partially submerged the pontoon. The Queen and the spectators were for a moment panic stricken, but the pontoon soon righted and floated free. The Queen was then conveyed safely to her destination.

To Be Attacked in Their Stronghold.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The Parnellites are going to be attacked in their own fortresses in the south and west of Ireland, which have been left too much in the hands of the Nationalists, and the local patriotic union has now determined to cover Ireland with political organizations directly hostile to the league. The National League will be fought in every district, and it is expected that a large amount of Unionist feeling, now lying suppressed or intimidated, will be called forth. The Parnellites will not be allowed a walk-over at the next election. They are to be attacked in every seat, and it will probably turn out that even in the south and west the Unionist minority will be large.

The Foresters' High Court.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The High Court of the Order of Foresters has refused to agree to a proposal to expunge the paragraph of the Investigating Committee's report stating that freedom of action having been granted in the matter of graduated contributions to American courts, an obstacle has been removed which has hitherto impeded the progress of the order in America.

The Chief Forester announced that the total membership of the order was 700,000. He also made a statement of the financial condition of the order, showing that the total amount of funds in the various treasuries amounted to £4,580,000.

The Cremation Conference.

PARIS, Aug. 5.—The International Cremation Conference to-day sent a telegram to Emperor William asking him to espouse the cause of cremation. All the American delegates signed the telegram.

Precautions Against Cholera.

CAIRO, Aug. 5.—The Egyptian Government has adopted the severest measures by quarantine and surveillance to prevent Jeddah pilgrims from bringing cholera into Europe.

Great Mt. Athos Aflame.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Despatches from Athens announce a most disastrous fire upon the celebrated Mount Athos, the Holy Mountain of the Greek Church. The fire has destroyed the largest part of its wonderful forests. Of the 20 Greek monasteries which have been located upon the mountain for centuries, most have been completely destroyed. The loss is estimated at 5,000,000 francs. Twenty monks and hermits have perished in the flames.

The mountains of the district of Mount Athos, near Salonica, are covered with vast forests of pine, oak and chestnut. They are 6000 feet above the level of the sea, and during the Middle Ages were dotted over with hermitages and monasteries, 20 of which still remain. The monks dwelling in the mountains are said to number about 6000, from Greece, Bulgaria, Roumania and Russia. No females are permitted to enter the peninsula. The monks are ruled by an administrative assembly composed of delegates chosen for a term of four years. Some of the monasteries had rich libraries and old and beautiful manuscripts. Several of the latter have been photographed and deposited in the Museum of Moscow.

An Explanation Demanded.

PARIS, Aug. 5.—It is reported that King Leopold has signed a treaty with Germany securing to the Germans forts on the Meus as a basis of operations in case of war with France. The French Foreign Minister will be asked in the Chamber of Deputies whether the French Government has obtained from Belgium an explanation admitting of no equivocations.

The Patriarch's Protest.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 5.—The Greek patriarch here has resigned as a protest against the Porte's disregard of the Greek church.

Fatality Near Princeton.

PRINCETON, Aug. 5.—This afternoon Chauncey Capron of Paris left Harney Bros.' brick yard with a load of brick. He called at a store in the village and purchased a lunch, then went on to the 2d concession of Blenheim, where he was seen by B. Howes and C. Coster of Princeton. Returning again about 6 p.m. they saw his team standing still on the road, and on reaching it found him lying just behind the wagon, dead, the wagon having passed over his arm and chest, breaking the arm and crushing in several ribs.

Ambitious City Notes.

HAMILTON, Aug. 5.—Andrew Kennedy, a laborer, was turned out of a house in James-street north, and having no place to go he and his wife and two children have been camping out, sleeping wherever they could. Inspector Hamilton investigated the matter, and discovering the condition of the people he had a warrant issued against them for vagrancy. Kennedy, his wife and two children were arrested this morning and are now in the cells. An effort will be made to have the children put in the home.

The collection of tolls on the York-street road, which has been free for a year on account of the road being out of repair, will be resumed to-morrow.

Miss Haight, the new head nurse at the hospital, is a graduate of the Toronto Training School.

Strange Disappearance.

WOODSTOCK, Aug. 5.—James Sackrider, who is supposed to be insane, left his daughter's place, at Currie's, on June 1 and has not been heard of since. His relatives are anxious about him and have done everything in their power to learn his whereabouts, but without success. Mr. Sackrider is worth about $6000, and has only one child, Mrs. E. Tusher of Currie's Crossing. Mr. John Sackrider of Burgessville is a brother of the missing man. The following is a pretty accurate description of the man: He wore a light suit of clothes, cap and a full beard tinged with grey. He has a scar on his nose and another on his forehead, is 5 feet 8 or 9 inches in height and his left hand is partially paralyzed. Shortly after leaving home he was reported to have been seen in company with an Indian near Brantford.

The Daily Review.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6, 1890.

THEY ARE BEING EDUCATED.

Two months ago Mr. Meredith was fiercely opposed and his proposals strongly denounced by the Liberal press. A short time before, in the Legislature, the Mowat Government and its followers had voted down his proposals one by one, and the partisan press felt called upon to back up the Government. Now, however, the elections are over, and candor has freer play with some of the organs. For instance that staunch Liberal paper, the London Advertiser, says:—

"The fee system of paying public servants must go. That, it seems to us, is a fair proposition, and it will be supported by the majority of the people. The laborer is worthy of his hire whether he be a customs inspector, an inland revenue collector, a registrar or a sheriff, but those who employ him can fairly demand that he shall receive fair remuneration for work performed and no more. Give these public servants good salaries, demand of them steady, faithful service, but let their remuneration end there."

Other Liberal papers have lately voiced similar ideas. The amusing part of it is that they do so with an air of having made a discovery and as guilelessly as if they and the Government had not refused to have this very system carried out. Mr. Meredith's policy embraced just what the Advertiser wants. He took the stand that officials should be paid a fair salary, and that the fees over that amount should go the people. Of course, that would deprive young Mr. Mowat, for whom Mr. Mowat, sr., created an office, and other officials of a large part of the exorbitant sums they now receive as "remuneration," and Mr. Mowat, sr., and his followers would not consent to that. It would be the right thing to do; It is not right that men should receive excessive amounts for holding office, as some do now under the fees system, and although the Liberal papers are getting their eyes open rather late in the day, Mr. Mowat may yet find that he will be compelled to adopt another of the planks of Mr. Meredith's platform.

These Liberal papers, however, do not seem to have their eyes fully opened yet. They should go a little further. There are many officials in Ontario who are really county officials, but they are appointed by the Provincial Government. Why should not the people whom they serve select their own officials as well as pay them? This is another part of Mr. Meredith's policy. He has demanded that county officials be appointed by the counties and their salaries fixed by the people who pay them. If our friends of the Liberal press will only keep their eyes on Mr. Meredith and follow him in other matters, as they are doing now on the question of the fee system, they will have a respectable policy, and one entirely in the interest of the Province, to contend for. They may make Mr. Mowat move in the direction they desire if they are persistent enough and have a large allowance of patience, but in the meantime they can console themselves with the fact that they are now advocating the policy which Mr. Meredith advocated during the recent campaign.

THE exportation of frogs is depleting the country of that kind of croakers, but the Liberal leaders remain.

PART of Mr. Wiman's plan to make the great resources of Canada tributary to the progress of the United States is by occupancy through individual purchase. The Ontario Government's course of selling timber and mineral lands to United States speculators, who hold them, is well adapted to suit Mr. Wiman's scheme.

The Newfoundland Cod Fishery.

ST. JOHNS, Nfld., Aug. 5.—It is, of course, too early to form an estimate of this season's cod fishery, but up to this date the news, taken as a whole, is unfavorable. There are, as usual, localities in which the catch has been fairly good—a few in which it has been very good; but the intelligence from the great majority of the fishing centres is anything but encouraging. The Bank fishery up to this date has been on the whole unsuccessful. From Labrador the news is meagre and only applies to the small portion of the coast south of St. Lewis Bay, in which traps and seines had done fairly; hook-and-line men had got nothing. From all the great northern bays the news is bad; to the south of St. Johns there has been a greater amount of success. The caplin season has gone—the best of the summer—and the squids are now appearing. Much anxiety regarding the results of the season's labors is felt and expressed, and some fear that we shall have a failure. To add to our anxiety, the lobster fishery, on which so many are dependent, is far below that of last year. Of course there is still a portion of the season remaining in which much may be done, but at present the prospects are not bright. Crops have improved greatly since the warmer weather set in.

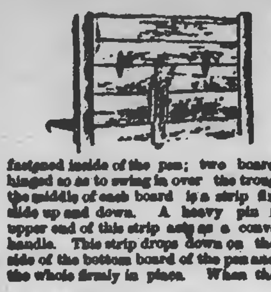
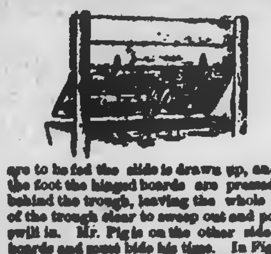
FARM AND GARDEN.

ITEMS OF INTEREST TO FARMERS AND HORITICULTURISTS.

Many Little Bits of Advice Which Will be Found Useful by Agriculturists and Breeders—Milking Made Easier—A New Hog Trough.

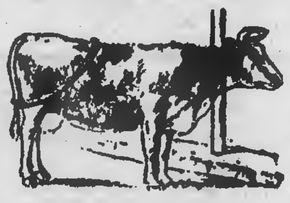
Any one who has fed pigs, and been annoyed by their getting into the trough while it was being cleaned out, and then after they are driven away rushing back and getting their feet in the trough just in time to have the swill poured all over their heads and much of it spilt, will appreciate the contrivance represented in our illustration, engraved from a sketch furnished by Mr. Willard F. Hallock, Middlesex Co., Conn. The trough is fastened inside of the pen; two boards are hinged so as to swing in over the trough. In the middle of each board is a strip fixed to slide up and down. A heavy pin in the upper end of this strip acts as a convenient handle. This strip drops down on the outside of the bottom board of the pen and holds the whole firmly in place. When the pigs are to be fed the slide is drawn up, and with the foot the hinged boards are pressed down behind the trough, leaving the whole length of the trough clear to sweep out and pour the swill in. Mr. Pig is on the other side of the boards and must bide his time. In Fig. 1 the trough is shown as closed against the pigs, in Fig. 2, free to their access.





Device For Use in Milking.

To get the full supply of milk and cream, unvarying kindness and quietness in the stable is a requisite. With the best intentions in the world, a workman may be led into an angry exclaimation, when receiving a vigorous switch in the face from the tail of the cow he is milking. A device to restrain the cow from moving her tail, and also to prevent voiding during the operation of milking, is herewith illustrated. A piece old rope, at least an inch in diameter, is cut off six feet in length for cows of ordinary size. The ends are fastened neatly together by a splice, covered with twine. This circle of rope is placed upon the cow as shown in the illustration. There should be one for each milker, and nails placed where they may be conveniently hung when not in use.



MILKING MADE COMFORTABLE.

Do not cramp the roots of trees or plants when replanting. Dig a hole big enough to receive the roots in their natural shape.

Destroying wormy fruit that drops is a good thing, but it is only part of the warfare that must be waged against insect enemies.

It is not thought to make much difference whether a hog's skin is clean or not, judging from general custom in feeding. But this is contrary to fact, for it has been amply demonstrated that an animal with a clean skin does not consume as much food as one not kept clean, and gives a better return for the food eaten.

Butter that is worked too much has the grain broken down and becomes greasy. Tons of butter are spoiled by working it to death.

The increased production of corn, wheat and oats in the Southern States, as compared with production ten years ago, is over 280,600,000 bushels.

Turnips can be grown cheaply, and it is turnips that is the mainstay of the English flockmaster. Why can't the American flockmaster make them his reliance?

It is said that from twenty-six pounds of beans planted last spring, George Litchfield, of Verdon, Neb., harvested and threshed thirty bushels or 1800 pounds.

Mustard yields a crop of about twenty-five bushels to the acre, which is worth from $2 to $3. Two quarts of seed to the acre is the quantity sowed. We do not know as to the certainty of the crop.

Education does more for a poor farm than fertilizers. It grows better crops and breeds better stock. What many a poor farm, with its scrawny cattle and foul acres, wants is a heavy application of brains.

The ram should have a good form and good fleece, even if he is not as large as one might wish. In other words a small ram of good form and fleece is better than a large ram without these characteristics.

The familiar green cabbage worm (Pieris rapæ) is bred by a whitish butterfly. There are two broods, one in April, one in the fall. The worm works down into the head, cutting through leaf after leaf in its search for the tenderest parts.

Do not neglect to lay in a good supply of clover hay for your poultry in winter. To feed the dried clover hay, chop it fine, in pieces less than an inch long; then steam it, add a little salt, and mix in with bran or other soft food and feed warm.

One merit of the Bartlett pear is that the windfalls can generally be ripened, even though not fully grown. One demerit is the spicy flavor of the Bartlett. But as many pear eaters do not know the Barlett, except by name, many pears are sold for Bartletts that are not Bartletts at all.

A prominent stock-breeder says: In raising colts I teach them to eat, and have them on full feed of bran and oats before they are weaned, and I can wean them at four months without any loss of flesh. I feed no corn until past 3 years old, but feed liberally with bran, carrots and oats, and all the cured fodder or clover hay that they will eat, and maintain a steady growth all winter.

With one cow that persistently started, stopped and kicked, says Mr. Crandall in the New York Tribune, it was at last discovered that she only did it when the teat was grasped high up when beginning to milk. The pressure of milk there at the time caused pain. By milking at first with but two or three fingers on the end of the teat and drawing downward so as to [illegible] it and relieve the pressure above the cow was got to stand perfectly quiet. This plan may modify a number of "kickers."

There are two or three things that might profitably be done with a "worn-out orchard." It may be fertilized, it may be pruned, and if something is not done to improve it it might profitably be cut down. Don't keep it for what it has been, at any rate.

When our educational system shall be made so practical that our farmers and [illegible] will be scientist, practical scientists, we shall not see so many attempts to grow crops upon soils that lacks just the particular plaint food that a particular plant must have.

As a general rule, for the hatching of chickens 21 days are required; for partridges, 24 days; for pheasants, 25 days; for guinea hens, 25 days; for common ducks, 28 days; for pea fowls, 28 days; for turkeys, 28 days; for Barbary ducks, 35 days, and for geese, 30

Mr. Depew says that Queen Victoria is a wonderful woman, and he was much struck with the way her face lights up when she smiles. It would appear from this that Mr. Depew took occasion when in her majesty's presence to get off a few good things, and with unqualified success.

The British Government has never granted amnesty to John Boyle O'Reilly, his escape from a convict's doom in Western Australia having apparently placed him outside the pale of forgiveness. Meanwhile Mr. O'Reilly, who is 46 years old, pursues the even tenor of his way, displaying in his poems and lectures a sympathy for humanity which prejudice of party, race or creed cannot narrow.

Princess Marie Leonie Bonaparte, daughter of Prince Charles, has just married a simple lieutenant of infantry and brought him a dowry of $3,000,000. The father at first opposed the marriage, but Bonaparte women are in the habit of doing as they like, and the princess had her way.

The Leary Raft.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—The great Leary raft arrived at Hempstead Bay at 6 p.m. It left Jaggins, N.S., nearly two months ago and originally contained 17 sections, each 101 feet long, 35 feet deep and 35 feet wide. It is reported four sections were lost near Cape Cod.

Riot at an Anarchist Picnic.

Six policemen were badly handled by the infuriated Anarchists, one of whom, Emil Vogt, was locked up. During the riot an American flag floating from a staff at the entrance to the grounds was torn down and trampled under foot. THE NEW CUSTOMS HOUSE.

To be Built this Season—Sir Hector Langevin Will Lay the Corner Stone.

Mr. James Stevenson, M.P., returned this morning from Ottawa, where he learned that, as previously decided, the work on the new customs house will be begun in a few days. Mr. Askwith, the contractor, is at present in British Columbia, but is expected home in ten days, and he will come at once to Peterborough to begin the work here. His foreman will come ahead of him and will be here in a day or two.

Mr. Stevenson had an interview with Sir Hector Langevin, the Minister of Public Works, and Sir Hector consented to attend at the laying of the corner stone and will conduct that ceremony. Sir Hector became a Cabinet Minister in 1864, and has held a position in the Cabinet from that time until the present, with the exception of the period from November 1873 to October 1878. He was a member of the Union Conferences at Charlottetown and Quebec in 1864, and of the London Colonial Conference of 1866 67, which completed the terms of Confederation. He is thus one of the fathers of the Dominion and has taken a leading part in guiding the ship of state since. His coming visit to Peterborough will be an interesting event and he will doubtless be welcomed by people of all shades of political opinion.

The new customs house will be built on the Government lot on the corner of George and Charlotte sts., and will be convenient to both railway stations.

For the Quill Drivers.

The REVIEW thankfully acknowledges the gift deposited at the business office yesterday of one porcupine, in prime condition, from the Paterson camp, Stony Lake. The varmint was captured while climbing a tree, boxed up and forwarded. It is surmised that to a local tin and store man and a grocery friend the REVIEW is indebted for the handsome though prickly gift. After being inspected by a crowd the porcupine was loaned to J. J. Turner, who may turn the quills into needles for sewing awnings. Turner carried him off with the remark that porcupines were sometimes eaten and made a savory dish.

Two or Ten.

John Dawson, who said he was from Campbellford, was arrested last night for being drunk and disorderly. At the Police Court this morning he said he had had a glass or two, but denied having been disorderly and said he had come to the station himself. His tongue, however, ran on and as he protested his innocence his acknowlegments showed that he had "talked loud" and that he had been in a disturbance. He was fined $2 or ten days in goal and not having the money was committed. The incessant stream of talk was not stopped by the sentence and continued as he was conducted below.

A Boy's Ingenious Tale.

The Toronto Empire of this morning says:—"A boy, eight years of age, who gave his name as Percy Maude, was charged yesterday morning with vagrancy. He said that he came from Peterborough and that his parents were dead. There was considerable doubt cast on the youngster's story, and he was handed over to Inspector Archibald, who will make an investigation into his story. Percy was discovered by Inspector Archibald to be a most ingenious fabricator for a boy of his age. So far from being an orphan, both of his parents are living in Peterborough. Several months ago he ran away from home and by some means reached Toronto and found out his grandmother, an old lady named Cheesman, who lives at 812 Yonge-st. There he remained until the other day, when he was again seized with a longing for wandering, but fortunately for himself his trip was this time abruptly cut short by the police."

THE SEWERAGE QUESTION.

Brockville's System of Sewers—The Advantages of the Separate System.

The REVIEW yesterday had a talk with Councillor Langford, the Chairman of the Committee on Sewerage, and he is rapidly filling up with information on the subject. All the time he can spare from street and bridge work, and his own business, is given to look up the question of sewers.

Referring to the trip members of the committee took eastward, Mr. Langford was enthusiastic in acknowledging the gentlemanly way in which they were looked after in Brockville. Soon after their presence became known Mayor Derbyshire, Engineer Chipman and members of the Board of Sewer Commissioners and Town Council called upon them and drove them around the town. As it was sewerage the deputation was especially interested in, the Brockville gentlemen took them to where the work of construction on the sewers of that town was going on, showed them the mouth of the sewer in the river, explained and gave practical illustrations of the working of the flushing tanks, exhibited the plans and the material, and wound up by taking them to dinner. The courtesies extended were greatly appreciated and the deputation voted unanimously that Mayor Derbyshire was every inch a gentleman—which is saying a great deal—and his associates made of the same material.

Brockville is a town of 9,000 inhabitants. It has a good class of business buildings and some fine residences with nice surroundings. It is pleasantly situated, and in a good financial condition. If one wished to criticise, perhaps the only excuse would be the lack of attention given to streets and the absence of boulevards.

BROCKVILLE'S SEWERS.

Brockville's sewers are being constructed on the separate system. The differences in the systems were explained by Engineer Chipman. The combined system is that in which the sewers are constructed to carry off the domestic house sewage and the rainfall and large enough to carry away the water at the times of the heaviest rains. This is the system of Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and other large cities. In the separate system the house sewage only is conveyed, the street water and rain water not being provided for. Sometimes it is desirable to allow the rainwater from roofs, overflows from cisterns, and in some cases the rain-water from paved courts, etc., to enter the sewers, and then it is known as the restricted system.

In Brockville the main sewers and laterals consist of vitrified salt-glazed sewer pipe, designed to carry the liquid house wastes, excreta and a limited quantity of roof water. Alongside the sewers are laid agricultural drain tiles, designed to carry the sub-soil water and cellar water. The system is not designed to carry street water, garbage, ashes, vegetable, parings, or rubbish. The advantages of the separate system were explained by Mr. Chipman to be as follows:—The quantity of sewage to be dealt with is a comparatively fixed quantity, not varying from 1 to 60 as in the combined system; the quantity being small, sewers can generally be made of salt-glazed sewer pipes, impervious to liquids and gases, under ordinary working pressures, which offer a smoother surface than brick or cement surface; the sewers are regularly and thoroughly flushed by automatic flush tanks with pure water, while in the combined system the rainfall is supposed to flush the system but it is done irregularly and imperfectly; and the sewers have no connection with the cellars of buildings, the cellar and subsoil water being removed by separate conduits. Mr. Chipman holds that the separate system is especially adapted for the following cities or towns:—Those in which the storm water can be removed by surface gutters or old drains with few long or expensive sub-surface channels; those in which it is necessary to carry the sewage to any great distance; and those in which it is now necessary, or may become necessary in the future, to treat the sewage by irrigation, downward intermittent filtration or precipitation.

The outfall in Brockville is located 900 feet from the shore of the St. Lawrence, in 45 feet depth of water. In many of the streets the rock excavation has been heavy. The size of the sewer pipes is from six to eighteen inches. The syphon flushing tanks have given good satisfaction. They work automatically and the sewers are thus flushed at intervals, and the frequency of the flushing can be regulated to suit the requirements. The water fills the pipes and rushes through them, keeping them clean, and no offensive odor is noticeable even at the openings. The time required to discharge sewage at the main outlet from buildings farthest removed from the outlet along the line of sewer is less than ninety minutes. Thus the sewage does not lie in the pipes. The cost of the sewers is partly borne by a frontage tax, regulated by a by-law of the town, and the whole cost of the sytem is expected to be $100,000, which amount has been provided for by this progressive town.

Councillor Langford was favorably impressed with this system. He remarked that he did not see why, if the sewers were carried to a point below the locks, the town should go to the expense of carrying the rain water all that distance, when it could, where necessary, be carried to the river or creek.

The deputation having had this separate system explained and having seen it in operation and in process of construction, will be able to give it consideration when the committee has progressed to a point where a decision as to the system to be adopted becomes necessary.

The Bell Telephone Company is making preparations with a view to extending their telephone line to Warsaw. This would give Warsaw telephone connection with Peterborough and all the principal points in Ontario.

Brevities.

—The band's weekly concert in the park last night was, as usual, enjoyed by a large crowd.

—Harry Singleton, son of Mr. T. Singleton, of Port Hope, fell off the steps of a store in that town on Monday and broke his arm.

—At the Belleville cheese board yesterday the prices ranged from 8½ to 8 7-16 cents. The total number of boxes board was 3,015, and 1,191 was sold.

—Newhall's Detective Agency, Toronto, is advertising for John V. McGregor, of Peterborough in 1879, Michael and Christopher McHugh, and others, who will learn something to their advantage financially by responding.

—A man named Simon Hatt, from Montreal, is under arrest at Madoc charged with swindling. His plan was to purchase goods in stores or horses from farmers and give a cheque in payment, and ask for the return of a dollar or so "just for good luck." As he paid good prices he generally got a dollar or so. It is said that merchants in Belleville and farmers near Madoc were victimized by him.

THE GOODS IDENTIFIED.

The Perth Burglars Believed to be the Ones Wanted Here.

Mr. E. B. Loucks, of Messrs. Muckleston & Co., returned this morning from Perth, where he saw the revolvers and cutlery found on the burglars under arrest there. The goods were the same as those taken from Messrs. Muckleston & Co.'s store on the morning of June 29th, but the private marks had been rubbed off. One of them named Thompson, answered the description of the man who bought a dark lantern in Mr. Butcher's store on the night of Saturday, June 28th, and this lantern was found in Muckleston's store on the morning of the burglary there.

The men are evidently a bad gang. Mr. McAllister's clothing store in Perth was burglarized on Thursday night of last week and eight ordered suits of clothing taken. Besides taking these goods clothes and clothing was thrown down and tramped on. The three tramps were suspected, and Chief Stone and Constable Corry, of Perth, started east in pursuit of them. They got word of where they had been put off a train and pushing on got ahead of them at Stittsville on Saturday night. The three arrived there near midnight and the constables proceeded to arrest them. Lawrence, a large man of the party, pulled a revolver, Thompson drew a knife and the third made ready with a revolver, but Chief Stone covered them with his revolver and the men, seeing that the constables were determined to arrest them, thought it best not to fight. When arrested they were wearing clothes stolen from Mr. McAllister's in Perth. They each had two suits, but had disposed of the rest of the goods. They also had two revolvers, a razor and a knife believed to have been stolen here. They were taken to Perth and when brought before the Mayor for their preliminary hearing they pleaded guilty and were committed for trial.

Mr. Loucks laid an information against the three for taking part in the burglary here. A photograph of Thompson will be taken and forwarded for Mr. Butcher to identify and the men will be tried on this charge also at Perth.

EXECUTED BY ELECTRICITY.

Kemmler's Death—The Experiment Pronounced to be a Failure.

By Telegraph to the Review.

AUBURN, N. Y., Aug. 6.—Kemmler, the murderer, was executed by electricity at 6.30 o'clock this morning. The current was kept on for 4½ minutes. The first contact was 15 seconds. The current was kept on the second time until the body fumed and gave off unpleasant odors. After the first contact Kemmler

APPEARED TO REVIVE,

but the doctors say he had no consciousness. Dr. Spitzka, the celebrated expert, said afterwards that the experiment was a failure, and that this would settle electrocution. "There will never be another electrocution," he said. The doctors unite in the belief that death was painless, that all consciousness was destroyed at the moment of contact. The sight in the execution room was sickening. At 7.30 the witnesses left the room under agreement to return at 8.15. The autopsy will be performed at 8.30. Kemmler displayed great bravery and helped to adjust the fastenings that bound him to the chair. No one knows who pulled the lever which turned on the current.

A Large Drive of Logs—A New Road and Other Notes.

Correspondence of the Review.

SAWLOG DRIVE.—One of the largest drive of sawlogs belonging to the Dickson Co, numbering ninety thousand pieces passed through last week. They took from Monday morning until Friday night to run over the slide. They will be cut up into market lumber at their saw mills in Harwood. They are sorting the logs below here.

GOVERNMENT ROADS.—The Ontario Government I am informed are going to spend some money this year in opening out a road some little distance along Burleigh Falls, through Harvey to Scott's mills. It will be a great boon to the few settlers in that section of Harvey. Mr. Londesborough was up their lately inspecting, &c.

EBENEZER CHURCH.—An organ has been placed in the W. M. church here last week, chiefly through the exertions of Rev. Mr. Johnston, of Lakefield, and a few others.

THE STEAMERS.—Both the Mary Ellen and the Cruiser are doing a large summer trade. Having been informed that the traffic was not so large as last year, I asked the captain of the Mary Ellen if such was the case, and his answer was that he was doing more with his steamer than on former seasons, and Capt. Reynolds of the Cruiser is very well satisfied with the trade his steamer has done; in fact it is beyond his calculations, as this is his first season on these waters.

THE HOTELS.—Mr. McFarlane, of the Carlton house, near the locks, has been extra busy this summer so far with tourists from a distance. Those that came last summer returned this season, being so well pleased with the surroundings. Our old friend Jas. E. Kearney, of the Lakeview house, has been also doing a very good summer trade. This house stands in a beautiful place, and James is a great fisher and takes his guests to all the best places to catch the fish.

THE CROPS.—The farmers around this section are well pleased so far with the bountiful harvest. The hay crop was excellent and the wheat crop promises a very good yield. We have been favored with fine showers of rain and the root crops will be beautiful.

"To Rent."

A woman boarded a Baker street car at Congress yesterday with a big red cardboard sign of "To Rent" in her hand, and soon after she had taken a seat a man hitched a little closer and blandly queried:

"Don't mean anything personal, does it?"

"No, sir!" she snapped.

"Didn't know, you know, but you was a widder, you know, and being kinder bashful you took this way of letting it be known that—"

"That what, sir? My husband is on the platform there!"

"That you had a house to rent," he humbly replied, as he went out to talk with the driver.

CATCHING FROGS.

An Industry That Furnishes New Yorkers a Great Delicacy.

The Belleville Ontario of August 4th thus describes the setting out of a party of frog catchers from that city:—"Dan Belknap, of Rossmore, and his three sons, with a boat for each and powerful head-lights, made their way northward from the city this morning, their paraphenalia loading two cart wagons, bound for Moira Lake, near Madoc. They looked like a party of duck hunters, but their business is more remunerative and less tedious. They are nothing more or less than frog hunters. They are after the variety that in former days woke the silent echoes about Zwick's Island with their doleful melody—the festive bull frog. Few are left there now. The Belknaps have gathered them in. Last week these hunters shipped 190 pounds of hind legs of frogs, gathered in two nights, to New York. They were for the famous Delmonico and are dished up to millionaire New Yorkers as great delicacies. The bright headlight blinds the frogs and they are picked out of the water, slaughtered and deposited in the boats. The work is done in the cool of the evening, the boats being noiselessly propelled by paddle through the swamps and marshes of the lakes. The Belknaps do not know their total shipments this season, but think the total weight would make a few tons at least."

This is an industry that has been carried on for some years in different waters. To such an extent has it been carried that in some places where frogs formerly were plentiful their evening songs are now rarely heard or the concerts with which they once filled the air have been reduced to an occasional solo. At Lakefield the frog catchers have been so industrious this season that they have almost silenced the voice of the frog in the waters above the village. A party of catchers from Crow lake in Belmont recently made their way to the vicinity of Orillia to find the raw material for their industry, and others from this vicinity have gone in the same direction for a similar purpose.

None of these who catch or deal in frogs, that we have heard of, has brought the industry down to a science like a man down the Otonabee who does a good business in catching and dealing in them. He built pens in which to hold the croakers, and instead of slaughtering them as they were caught he bagged them alive and took them to the pens. There they were kept, not exactly fattening, although they were kept in good condition, but until the warm season was over and the time when the market was well supplied was passed. Then he shipped them to market and reaped a good reward for his trouble. In the Trent and connecting waters frog catching has been carried on extensively for years.

KNOW HOW
—TO—
KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"There are many such. And yet I wronged you by the thought. But I could not help it."

A moment more passed in silence, and then the invalid resumed:

"There is one reason why I should like to live; I should be prepared for a better life. Since death has come—since I have known that he stood waiting by my bed—I have wondered at the evil life I have led: and I have thought that if the dark king would let me remain here a few more years I could be a better man. But 'tis too late now. The die is cast. Yet I have some joy in this. You have shed a happy light upon my dying hour. God bless you.

Ruric's feelings were easily moved, and there was something in the deep solemnity of this occasion that started his heart to a tender mood; and the last words of the dying man flowed the cup. He bowed his head, and covering his eyes with one hand, while he held in the other the hand of Conrad, he wept freely and silently.

At this moment the woman arose and left the room.

"She's gone," said the count, after he had recovered somewhat from the deep emotions which had been stirred within his own soul. "Sit down here beside me."

Ruric obeyed the request, and after he had seated himself he gazed sadly into the sick man's face.

"Say, Ruric," the count asked, while an eager look overspread his face, "was't true what Kopani told me; that you overcame Demetrius the Greek with the sword?"

"I did," the youth replied, in a whisper.

"But you did not disarm him!—you did not fairly take his sword from him?"

"I did Conrad."

"My soul, is it possible? And where have you been all your life?"

"In Moscow, and in Spain."

"And yet obscure."

"Never mind that now," interposed Ruric. "I have something of more interest. Do you—but you will pardon me for what I may say, for I assure you I mean it all for your good."

"Speak on," said Conrad, at the same time running his eyes almost enviously over the gun-maker's nobly-developed breast and shoulders.

"Then, first—I have just come from the lady Rosalind—Ah—I meant not—"

"Go on. I may have felt a pang at the mention of that name, but I know she loves you, and were I strong at this moment as ever I'd relinquish all claims of her to you. So fear not."

"Thank you, Sir Count, for this—but I was remarking: I am not long from her presence, and between us both we have suspected some dark things. Do you think the duke was really your friend?

The count started, and a strange gleam shot from his eyes.

"Go on," he uttered.

"Then listen: Before you ever came to my shop the duke had solemnly promised that she should receive no more trouble from you—that you would claim her hand no more."

"Do you know this?"

"I do."

"But it cannot be. Why should he have sent me on that mission to you?"

"I had taught one of his officers the sword exercise, and he knew I was your superior in strength, and the use of the weapon."

"Well—go on!" whispered the count, nervously and anxiously.

"Why—he thought very likely that we should not meet on such a question without a quarrel. He knew your natural impetuosity, and my strength of arm, and hoped you—would fall."

"But—go on!"

"His estate is running out and he wants the whole of Drotzen!"

"Ah! I see it now!"

"The duke had proposed himself for Rosalind's hand," resumed Ruric. "He says he has loved her long; and he will force her to marry him if he can, though he breaks her heart!"

"My God!" gasped the count, fairly starting up to a sitting posture; "how blind I have been! By my soul, he never was cordial—never kind."

Ruric gently laid the sick man back, and then he said:

"From all I can see and understand, the proud duke meant to get all you wealth and all of Rosalind's."

The count spoke not yet. He lay with his eyes closed, and groaned in agony at the strange revelations that were breaking in upon him.

But see. Why starts Ruric so suddenly!—and why does he turn so pale? Why do his hands tremble?—and why is his brow bent so eagerly?

"What is it?" asked the count, startled by the strange event.

"Hold!" whispered Ruric, in a frantic tone. "You were recovering once?"

"From this wound?"

"Yes."

"Yes. I was getting well fast, and the doctors said I should be stout and well in a month. But suddenly this change came on. Let's see—on Friday morning I felt the first relapse."

"The very time!" gasped Ruric to himself.

The count moved his head forward, and would have caught his companion by the hand if he could. "For God's sake, Ruric, what is it?"

"As I came this way I saw a humpbacked priest pass out from this house?" said the gun-maker interrogatively.

"Yes—yes," returned the count, speaking shortly and quickly. "It was Savotano. He has attended me. The duke recommended him."

"And was he here Thursday night?"

"Thursday? Ah—yes—he watched with me that night.

"And has he been in attendance since?"

"Yes; every day. But why do you ask? Say—what is that meaning look upon your face? What is it?"

At this moment the door of the apartment was quietly, noiselessly opened, and Kopani, the surgeon, entered the place.

"Ha!" cried Ruric, starting towards him, and grasping him by the arm, "your patient is poisoned! A deadly poison has been given him, and it is even now eating his life away!"

"Impossible!" gasped the surgeon, straining his eyes to see plainly who it was that spoke to him. "Ah," he uttered, as he became somewhat used to the gloom of the apartment, is it you, sir?"

"Aye—but mind not that now. Cannot you do something for the count? He has been poisoned."

"It cannot be!"

"By the hopes of my salvation!" cried Conrad Damonoff, starting up to a sitting posture, "he speaks the truth! That accursed priest! Oh! Olga! Olga! I never dreamed that thou wast mine enemy!"

"But what is it all?" the surgeon asked, gazing first upon Ruric, and then upon the count. "Speak, some one."

"Tell him," groaned Conrad.

"Listen:" said the gun-maker. "I have suspicions, but mind you, they are founded on facts, and the facts are these: The Duke of Tula is well-nigh free from the possession of property. His half of Drotzen is all mortgaged, and he wants the other half. That other half he cannot have while Damonoff lives. The duke, too, has sworn that Rosalind Valdai shall be his wife—so he would have her property, also. This humpbacked priest is Olga's special tool. It was Olga who freed him more than once from deserved punishment. Last Thursday evening he was with the duke in private council, and he came from thence directly to this place. Now you can judge for yourself."

To be continued.

THE ARGENTINE RESOLUTION.

Dr. Celman Resigns the Presidency and is Succeeded by Dr. Pellegrini.

PARIS, Aug. 5.—A despatch from Buenos Ayres says the Foreign and Finance Ministers have resigned.

VALPARAISO, Aug. 5.—The President of the Argentine Republic, Dr. Juarez Celman, has presented his irrevocable resignation to Congress, giving as his reason the political and financial difficulties through which the republic is passing. He has been succeeded by the vice-president, Dr. Pellegrini.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—A Times despatch from Buenos Ayres says: President Celman, abandoned by Pellegrini, Roca, Pena and Garcia and completely isolated, has been forced to present his resignation at a joint meeting of the Chambers. As Celman's partisans still form a majority his resignation is possibly a trick. The Chambers have a constitutional right to decide whether the reasons given for the resignation are sufficient for its acceptance. The populace threaten to shoot any deputies who vote not to accept the resignation. A secret session is being held and the crowds that were surging back and forth in the lobbies have been ejected. A committee of deputies is trying to reconcile Celman and Roca and Pellegrini. The President, however, declares his resignation is irrevocable.

LIGHTBURN CLAIMS HIS BRIDE.

He Left Providence With Nineteen Dollars and Returns a Millionaire.

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Aug. 5.—Six years ago Benjamin W. Lightburn, a poor young man from Virginia, graduated from Brown University with just $19 in his pocket. He had supported himself in college by cleaning the city lamps and by keeping a boarding house. During his university course he became engaged to Miss Delia L. Carpenter of North Main-street. They parted till such time as Lightburn could earn enough money to support a wife.

He went to Kansas City with his $19, entered a lawyer's office, saved his earnings, invested in real estate and struck it rich. He has sent enough money to Miss Carpenter to enable her to obtain an education.

The second year he was away he sent her a five hundred dollar gold watch, and has since presented her with diamonds. Lightburn has now arrived in Providence to claim his bride, who persistently refused to name the wedding day till she had become "accomplished." He is reported to be worth $1,000,000.

The wedding will occur in the old First Baptist Meeting House, and President Andrews of Brown University, it is said, will officiate. Mr. Lightburn has built an elegant house in Kansas City, to which he will take his bride.

AN EMBEZZLER NABBED.

License Inspector Rae of Minneapolis Caught at Montreal.

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—One of the cleverest and quietest pieces of detective work ever done here was put through this morning and the prisoner left for the west by the 9 o'clock train. Some days ago License Inspector Rae of Minneapolis, Minn., arrived in Montreal with his wife and two children and stopped at the Albion Hotel. He had with him $95,000 of embezzled money. He then took a house in Philip's-square, one of the semi uptown fashionable quarters, where he lived with his family. Detective Howard from Minneapolis was on his track, aided by a local man, and on Sunday evening they effected the arrest as Rae was standing in front of his own door. In his possession was found $90,000. He was privately guarded that night and yesterday was taken before Police Magistrate Desnoyers, where he waived extradition proceedings and left for home to-day in company with an officer. The affair was kept so quiet that it was only at 8½ this morning it began to be suspected and even yet a knowledge of it is confined to less than half a dozen people here.

A DOUBLE DROWNING.

Two Young Men Perish While Booming Logs at Vancouver.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 5.—While booming logs at the Vancouver Company's mill Joseph Ouillet and Isaac Green fell into the water and were drowned. Ouillet came here from St. Johns, Que., about a year ago. Green came from Hillsboro, Wellington county, Ont., where his people are evidently, from what can be made out from his letters, well-to-do people. His cabin was comfortable and from all that could be discovered by the search of his trunk, and by the report of the men at the mill, he was a sober, steady and industrious young man, who had come out to the coast with the determination to make his way. There was evidence that he was in possession of several lots in the city, on which he had been paying instalments and that he took care of himself and his earnings. Several cards of invitation to social events and lectures at the Y.M.C.A. were found in his trunk, and a number of letters from his people in the East which breathed warm affection for him. He had no money either on his person or in his trunk, although his roommate asserted that had been paid some money that day.

Skin Diseases

Itching, Burning, Scaly, Crusted, Pimply and Blotchy Cured by the Cuticura Remedies.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONIAL.

About two years ago I was attacked with an inflammatory disease on my face (petyriasis), which was very troublesome, being extremely itchy and painful, giving rise to the production of small bran-like scales. My general health was affected by it. I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT, CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP according to directions, and experienced a change from the very first day; they worked wonderfully and by their continued used for about five months I was completely cured. I have unbounded faith in the CUTICURA REMEDIES. I regard the CUTICURA RESOLVENT as the very best blood purifier; a trial will convince anyone. The CUTICURA SOAP is the best in the market, and cheap at twice its present price. I shall use no other for the toilet and bath. With the prevalence of skin diseases among us as a people (and they are the most difficult to deal with), I regard the CUTICURA REMEDIES of more important and intrinsic value to the world than any other medicine now before the public. I am, with deep gratitude,
(Rev.) WM. CREELMAN, York Corner, Me.

WITHOUT A SINGLE PANG

WILLIAM KEMMLER KILLED BY JUDICIAL LIGHTNING.

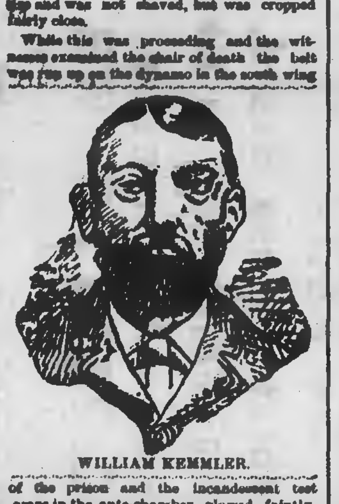
His Death Was Instantaneous—The Murderer "Takes it Cool and Does the Best he Can"—He Wishes Everybody Good Luck—The Execution Bungled.

AUBURN, Aug. 6.—Kemmler went peacefully to sleep last night and slept soundly and was snoring until 5 o'clock this morning, when he was awakened by Guard McNaughton. Pastor Houghton, who has attended Kemmler, as also Prison Chaplain Yates, was with him. They read from the Bible and he prayed with them. He dressed himself without aid in a suit of grey mixed goods. About his neck he buttoned a turn-down collar, with a checked tie of lawn stuff. His hair he combed and brushed with great care. His shoes were well polished, and while he made himself tidy the warden and a tall stranger, a deputy sheriff from Buffalo, entered the cell.

The stranger held by his side a pair of clippers. The warden explained to Kemmler that he must have the top of his head shaved. The prisoner demurred. He had taken great pains in dressing his hair and besides, as he explained to the warden, he did not want to be disfigured. He wanted the people to see and know that he was not a man of repulsive appearance, as has been stated.

Kemmler's hair is dark brown and wavy, with a Hyperion curl that fell upon his forehead. Of this he was proud. In the shadow of death his vanity asserted itself. His hair, however, was cut, but the curl was saved and, as the sequel proved, with no good result. The clipped spot was 3¼ by 1¼ inches in size and was not shaved, but was cropped fairly close.

While this was proceeding and the witnesses examined the chair of death the belt was run up on the dynamo in the south wing of the prison and the incandescent test amps in the ante-chamber glowed faintly. The current was on. The strange power was coursing the circuit.



WILLIAM KEMMLER.

"The evidence was there, but how feebly they burned!" Thus exclaimed Dr. Macdonald, who was the only one who got into the ante-room, and that while ignorant of the Warden's desire to keep its secrets inviolate. And in response to Dr. Macdonald's comments, Electrician Davis remarked that there was something wrong about the machinery down there, referring to the dynamo end of the circuit.

This remark took place before the electricizing, it is well to remember, and was undoubtedly as true a few minutes later when the belt was applied to Kemmler.

The condemned man, after having his hair cut on the top of his head, listened to the reading of the death warrant by the warden. None of the State witnesses were present, only the prisoner, the preachers and the warden. The man was cool, unruffled, almost apathetic. The last named condition, however, was discredited by the blanched hue of the man's face.

"Come, Bill!" commanded the warden, when all had been done in the cell, and the little party of four—warden, prisoner, clergymen—passed through the ante-room, past the electrical appliances, and the warden led the way finally into the death chamber. Close behind him stood the man he would soon kill. His hands swung at his side easily, save when as though in some embarrassment he stroked his brown full beard and mustache as he confronted the white, expectant faces of the twenty-five men who, besides the warden, should see him die.

Mr. Durston placed a plain, wooden-bottomed chair directly in front of the other and different chair, and bade Kemmler sit upon it. He obeyed readily. There was no uneasiness about his movements. He seated himself leisurely. There was no nervous tension apparent; indeed, not nearly so much as among the men about him. He was apparently the most composed person in the room. The warden took a place beside Kemmler, after the latter had become seated in the kitchen chair placed for him, resting his arm over the prisoner's shoulder on the chair back.

Holding his hat in his head and standing there in the silent chamber the state's officer presented the condemned man to those present, introduced him indeed, and this is what he said:

"Now, gentlemen, this is William Kemmler. I have just read the warrant to him and told him that he has got to die, and if he has anything to say he will say it."

There was surprise among those present. There was at that moment and place a shock from such a formality. Kemmler, however, seemed gratified because he had an opportunity to speak, but as the warden moved back the prisoner glanced about the half circle of curious or pitying faces before him. With his feet wide apart upon the stone floor, with a hand on either knee and elbows akimbo, the simple fellow said:

"Well, I wish everybody good luck in the world," in easy, steady tones; "and I'll go to a good place; and the papers have been saying lots of stuff about me that ain't so."

That was all, but into the poor wretch's face came an expression men have when they have acquitted themselves of some act that they had anticipated to do. And with all else depicted upon his face there was a something that evidenced submission to force. Those who looked into his face would not have wondered if he had said:

"I'm fast and close here, I know I'm to be killed, but don't hurt me, don't hurt me."

There was apprehension without horror plain upon his features.

The prisoner glanced over his shoulder as he ceased speaking and Mr. Durston came to his side.

"Take off your coat, Bill," said the warden. There was no word, but with easy, steady joints he pulled off one sleeve and then swung off the garment to the chair from which he had risen. The warden stood behind him, drew forth the bottom of his shirt and cut it off behind so as to permit easy adjustment of one of the electrodes. Meanwhile Kemmler readjusted his necktie, which was already neatly fixed in a bow knot.

"Are your suspenders all right?" asked the warden, as he laid down the shears he used.

"Yes, all right," was the answer.

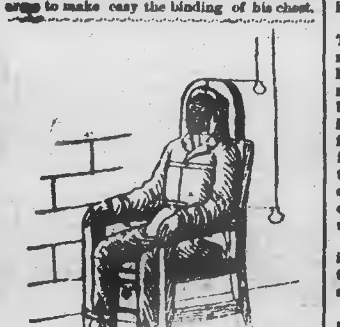
"Well then, Bill, you'd better sit down here," said the warden, whose heart is kind and whose tone was that of a parent to a child that should be corrected.

The warden was moved with compassion for the being who, obedient to a nod, seated himself in the great chair never to rise alive. The doomed man took his place, and some who witnessed him admired what they styled his "nerve," and others pitied him and dreaded the end.

"Take it cool, Bill. I'm going to stay close beside you all the while to the end," said the warden. Then he buckled a strap at one shoulder.

"I will. I'll take it cool," returned Kemmler, and then with his elbows upon the great arms of the chair, he drew himself firmly back on the seat so that the electrode pressed him hard at the base of the spine. Two assistants were working at the straps, first the arms, then the chest, waist, hips, legs and lastly the leather mask. There was some fumbling in nervous haste and the doomed man observed it and spoke:

"Take your time," he said, "take your time," and while he spoke he held high his arms to make easy the binding of his chest.



THE DEATH CHAIR AND MASK.

And again the witnesses glanced each into his neighbor's face in approval or compassion. Then, as the insulated neck saddle was being placed, he suggested that if pressed forward as it was being adjusted it would be more easy for him.

"All right, Bill, all right," returned the warden, and his voice was a trifle unsteady; "it won't hurt you, Bill, it won't hurt you at all," he added.

"Take your time," Mr. Durston, "don't be in a hurry," the prisoner responded, and then he added as the dangling mask was being shaped for adjustment:

"Well, I wish everybody good luck."

Pastor Houghton's eyes seemed wet, as he glanced up through his glasses as if to see if those present did not recognize in this expression of good will some evidence of good results from his ministrations to the prisoner.

Then the mask was drawn across the man's face. It covered his eyes, grasped his chin and firmly pressed his forehead. It was not well fitted. Kemmler said so and spoke to direct its proper adjustment. But when the growing sunlight had been shut out of his eyes and when the rustling vines and green grass were blinded from his vision, there seemed to come to him a strong realization of the fact that sunlight would never again touch his living eyes and that upon his vision had died the final glimpse of the bright greenness without the windows. There seemed also to rush over him an overwhelming sense of self-pity, for there was a touching plaint in his tone when he spoke, and the inflections of ox-like submission were intensified as they became focussed upon the end of all. He spoke:

"Do everything right, Mr. Durston, and push down that more on top of my head."

He referred to the electrode which was being fitted to the top of his head. It was done, seeming to push his head down between his shoulders, while the mask was buckled back so tightly that the edge was buried in the skin of the nose and forehead. Once more he spoke:

"Well, I want to do the best I can and I can't do better than that."

It was the plea of a man in desolation for human sympathy. He had tried to be steady. He had desired to save the warden from a harrowing scene, and his appearance as well as his manner had done that and more; it had disproved all statements that the man was insane or in a flabby state of dejection. Indeed, he did not appear the brute that he has been depicted.

"No, I can't do any better than that," he repeated after a moment's pause.

"God bless you, Kemmler, you have done well," spoke Dr. Spitzka in his quick, nervous way, and there were pitying tears in many eyes and husky voices muttered:

"You have, Kemmler, you have."

Every strap had been tightened, each electrode had been pressed to the seat of life; the warden's deputies stepped back; there was a hush. The warden enquired of Drs. Macdonald and Spitzka how long the current should be maintained on Kemmler's body. The first response was 20 seconds, which was almost instantly changed to 10 seconds.

"Very well, gentlemen," replied the warden, and he moved towards the door of his secret room, and at the moment Dr. Fell of Buffalo, who designed the death chair, was dropping water from a bulb syringe through a long rubber tube into the electrode sponges.

The hour was 6 o'clock and 42 minutes. The warden reappeared from the ante-room.

"Well, everything is ready," he said, while he faced the death chair six feet away. The bound man in the chair had heard every word. He knew he was upon the edge of the eternal world and a lightning flash should show him through. The secret of that minute's agony of suspense has gone out with him. His hands were clinched and rigid. He waited the shock.

It was now 6 o'clock and 43½ minutes. Two and one half minutes had been consumed in securing him with straps after he sat down in the chair, and from that time to the moment all was ready 5½ minutes had passed. Then the warden leaned over and nodded his head to someone who stood in the secret room at the fatal switch. There was a quick convulsive start of the bound figure in the chair, a little squeaking sound of straining straps, breathless watchers with every sense bent upon the moveless wretch bound head, hand and feet, and no sound save birds' songs in the bright sunshine outside the windows.

The bar of a heavy shade at one window was lifted by the straying breeze and fell back against the bar. The noise was slight, but to the tense and breathless watchers in the death chamber it seemed equal to the sound of clashing arms.

Dr. Spitzka and Dr. Shrady, drawn by deep interest almost unconsciously from their places, moved on tiptoe to places by the chair. But all was still and no man spoke. Every faculty was contributing to that of vision. Such a scene there never was on earth before. No man ever before had died thus by the deliberate purpose of his fellow-man. Here before men of science and laymen was then in silent operation, a mysterious agent whose results only could be seen or known.

If there could have been a universal mother of all living things on earth, there was being generated here within the iron loins of an inanimate object a vicious virus that might make her childless well nigh every hour.

After that convulsive start that marked the stroke of lightning upon Kemmler there was no movement of muscle nor twitch of nerve. The features from bridge of nose to chin seemed to have been pursed up as those of one facing a sleety storm or of one breasting a powerful dust-bearing wind. But all was still. Here was no driving storm, no rushing gale. There was no heave of the breast nor distension of the nostril. There was no twitch nor struggle. A hurrying wave frozen at the instant of its combining could not have been more still nor half so impressive as this silent form within the bonds of death.

Who should say? No man of science dared near his ear to the heart within the rigid figure there. The vicious virus from the machine's iron loins was yet flowing through the man so lately speaking, moving, there. The law demanded that the current of electricity should be maintained against his vitals until death should come.

But who should tell when death had come? The men of science believed that then the nerve centres were being beaten as with heavy hammers in different directions at the rate of some 230 times each second. Their books, though they told of no case like this, led the wise men to believe that the silent forces working in this man's body were disintegrating the nerve cells, the tissues, and the blood too, by divorce of oxygen from its corpuscles. They thought the blood was becoming by mechanical change fluidized and useless to sustain life.

And so they watched and listened in the silent room—5, 10, 15, 17 seconds. The time was very short, but to each one there it seemed like the span of an hour.

"There, that's enough. Take off the current," said the warden's chosen physicians—Macdonald and Spitzka—and the warden passed the word within the adjoining room, where someone had let on the current and where the same one cut it off.

Then Dr. Spitzka said: "Observe the lividity about the base of the nose and the entire nose itself. Note, where the mask rests on the nose, the white appearance there." The other doctors came about and dented the flesh with their fingers and watched the play of white and red upon withdrawal. They saw an abrasion upon the right thumb. In that supreme shock the murderer's fist had become so clenched in the convulsion that the nail of the forefinger had dug into the base of the thumb. Meantime a button pressed in the secret room had signalled the stopping of the dynamo.

Happiest of all in the room was Dr. Southwick of Buffalo, the father of electricizing in capital cases, and who has been studying and working upon the subject since 1881.

"There," he exclaimed, as he strode away from the chair to a knot of witnesses at the other end of the room, "this is the culmination of ten years' work and study. We live in a higher civilization from this day."

But even while he spoke a quick, sharp cry went up from those yet watching closely about the silent figure in the chair.

Then came moans of horror from strong men who looked. There had been, as they closely scanned, a movement in the breast of the man whom all believed had died one minute and 47 seconds before. The doctors and electricians could scarcely at first believe their eyes, but doubt was banished quickly, for there was another movement accompanied by a sudden gasp, and then the breast began to heave with long deep stertorous respiration. Then went forth the cry of sickening horror at the spectacle of a man half killed under the operation of the law.

"Start the current, start the current again!" shouted Dr. Spitzka. Others cried out likewise to have the scene brought to a close. All crowded about the chair and watched the laboring wretch whose breast, despite the broad, tight bands about him, was rising and falling with strong force. Slightly foamy saliva was exuded from the mouth, the entire body rocked in the efforts of the organs to resume their functions and deep fear fell upon some lest consciousness should return.

The doctors declared, however, that the man was beyond consciousness and some thought the action which startled all and sent the warden away with white face to order the current renewed was only a reflex muscular action. Not so one physician, who declared he would stake his name that he could bring Kemmler back to conscious life with brandy hypodermics.

Meantime Mr. G. G. Bain of Washington, D.C., had fainted and lay upon a bench where he was being fanned.

This spectacle was continued from 6½ until 6.47 o'clock.

Then there came again to the figure within the chair another shock under which the straps were strained again. The lungs, however, filled again and again, while the current was pouring through the unconscious body. The Warden and his helper were anxious beyond measure, and 2¼ minutes after the current had been reapplied the switch was opened and shut rapidly twice. Each time the body in the chair was lifted by the shock. The shoulders lifted to the level of the tops of the ears and the features contracted. The reapplication of the current was continued from 6.49½ to 6.51 o'clock, intermitted twice at the switch.

[illegible] groan of dismay was heard near the chair and smoke was observed curling up from Kemmler's back.

"He is burning!" shouted one.

"Cut off the current!" shouted another.

"He is dead. There's no use keeping up the current longer!" said some one else.

Again the warden gave the signal to open the switch and the body in the chair, surcharged with 4 distinct shocks, developed no further movement.

"He's unquestionably dead," said Dr. Macdonald, "and he would never have moved after the spasm of the first shock had the first shock been maintained 20 seconds, and a less time with a stronger current."

Meantime Dr. Fell was wetting the sponge in the electrode at Kemmler's back and putting out some little fire that had communicated to the man's clothing. Soon the smoke from burning cloth and flesh disappeared. But the odor still clung about the place, stifling and tenacious.

Almost immediately attendants began to unbind the corpse and finally the mask was removed. The eyes were found to be half closed and without a glassy stare. The lids were lifted and tests of the pupils with bright light were made. The optic nerves were dead. There was no contraction of the pupils. Where the mask had pressed the forehead there was a livid mark. The nose and the region of its base was of deeply livid hue. Purple spots soon began mottling the hands, arms and neck and the doctors said he was surely dead. One of the Buffalo doctors seven minutes after the straps were removed cut the skin at the temple for a microscope specimen of the dead man's blood. It was examined and found slightly coagulated.

Warden Durston produced his death certificate, which was read and signed by each witness of the execution.

Warden Durston was asked to state the pressure at the time the current was first applied. "About 1700 volts," was the response.

Kemmler's body was entirely unbound about 7½ o'clock and the doctors determined not to proceed at once with the autopsy. The witnesses returned to the hotel for breakfast.

"I'd have taken the chance, I think," remarked Dr. Shrady, "of resuscitating that man with hypodermics even an hour after the current was taken off at the first time and before its re-application."

There is said by all the physicians to be no doubt that consciousness was stricken instantly from Kemmler's brain. The fact that he was not instantly killed is the result of improper contact or of insufficient voltage or pressure. The consensus of opinion among the witnesses here to-day is that not the slightest doubt exists but that a human being may be instantaneously killed by 1000 volts applied through perfect contact and continued 20 seconds.

Kemmler's body will doubtless be disposed of to-morrow in the prison burying ground with quicklime.

DEATH WAS INSTANTANEOUS.

The Brain Paralyzed—Kemmler's Passing Was Painless.

Before 8½ most of the doctors had returned to the prison to prepare for the autopsy. The body of the dead man still sat in the electric chair, the limbs rigid, the expression of the face (but for the discolorations of the skin) unchanged. The rigor of the body was a matter of comment and surprise among the physicians. The jaw had not fallen and the pleasant expression, with which Kemmler had greeted the witnesses as he entered the execution room, still lingered about his features.

It was determined that Dr. Jenkins of New York, instead of Dr. Daniel, should do the work with the surgeon's knife, because of his long experience in performing autopsies on persons killed by electricity. Both Dr. Daniel and Dr. Jenkins stripped off their coats and vests and the surgeons' case was opened and the glittering array of knives and saws brought out. The body was lifted from the chair and placed on the table in the centre of the room. It still preserved its rigidity. A small wooden box was placed under the head to support it and the limbs were straightened out as far as possible. Then a convict was summoned from the prison to take off the clothing.

The removal revealed a scar nearly five inches in diameter where the second electrode had pressed against the base of the spine, showing that the current had burned through into the flesh. The body looked healthy and well nourished. Dr. Shrady at this point suggested the necessity of making the examination as formal as though it was to be taken for criminal investigation, and volunteered to act as secretary and take the report in shorthand. This was agreed upon, and the first step taken was to bind a clinical thermometer to the nape of the neck and take the temperature.

The record demonstrated that the man was dead beyond all question. The table, on suggestion, was moved over to the corner of the cell directly under the windows, where a better light could be had. When it was in position a general survey of the body was taken, and its external condition carefully noted. Then Dr. Jenkins took his surgeon's knife and began operations. The body was cut open. The heart, lungs and other organs were taken out and their condition noted carefully. They were all put in Mueller's fluid for preservation and future examination.

When the organs in the trunk of the body had been examined carefully, the top of the skull was removed and the brain taken out. This was the most interesting feature of the examination, as the theory on which the claims of greater humanity for this method of execution are based is the theory that the electric current paralyses the brain instantly and thus destroys all sensation. The physicians found evidence of the effect of the current on the formation of the skull, in the blood and on the brain tissue directly beneath the point of contact, which satisfied them that the paralysis of the brain was immediate.

THE RAILWAY AND THE TARIFF.

The Toronto Globe tries to turn the proposed railway through Peterborough to Sault Ste. Marie to political account, and after quoting a portion of an article which appeared in the REVIEW says:—

"Sault Ste. Marie has therefore been selected because it is upon the border, and affords a means of communication between a part of Northern Ontario and the United States. The Ontario and Dominion Parliaments are asked to aid the carrying out of the project. But surely it would be foolish to spend the nation's money upon the building of a line intended to increase the trade between Canada and the United States, and at the same time tax the nation for the purpose of restricting that trade. The REVIEW cannot consistently support international railways and the restriction of international trade."

The REVIEW believes in looking at facts as they exist and does not believe in pinning its faith to the views of theorists regardless of existing conditions. The present tariff policy is known as the National Policy, and if the Globe means to say that the REVIEW supports that policy it is right, but it alone must be responsible for the phrases it employs. The people of the Dominion have twice endorsed that policy since it was first adopted. When again asked to reject it, if the proposal is made to them—for Mr. Mowat told a Peterborough audience during the last Dominion campaign that the National Policy was a dead issue—they will enquire what its opponents desire to replace it with. The United States has not shown that it is willing to enter into a reciprocity treaty with Canada, and until it does and the terms it will agree to are known, the present system will be considered preferable to the former one which the National Policy replaced. An if the United States would agree to commercial union, the REVIEW does not believe that Canada is prepared to enter into a commercial combination with the Republic against Great Britain and the remainder of the world for the purpose of making "the great natural resources" of this country "tributary to the progress of the United States," as the originator of the scheme has aptly described the result of such a policy.

As to the railway, there is no connection between the advocacy of such a line and the support of the National Policy, except that both ideas agree in that the object of each is to develop the country and make it prosperous. There is freight at the Sault which must find an outlet to the seaboard and the traffic will increase. If that traffic can be carried through Peterborough, on a railway such as the one proposed, the town and the country will be benefitted. That is clear, but how that effects the tariff, or the National Policy is not so clear. In fact it does not, and it is only a very murky vision, born of political desperation, that can see any inconsistency in the REVIEW's advocacy of the railway scheme and its support of Sir John Macdonald.

RIOTING, WITH BLOODSHED

SEVERAL TORONTO POLICEMEN WOUNDED BY FLYING MISSILES.

A Spectator Has His Head Split Open with a Club—A Mob of 2000 Orange Sympathizers Take Possession of the Streets.

TORONTO, Aug. 7.—The Emerald Beneficial Association celebrated the birthday of Daniel O'Connell here yesterday. At night a mob of Orange sympathizers paraded the streets, and assembled in front of Moss Park Rink, where a demonstration was being held and stoned the buildings. The police charged the mob, and used their batons vigorously.

Rioting subsequently occurred in Shuter and Queen-streets and all the police reserves were called out. A spectator named Thomas Wrigley had his skull split open by a policeman's baton and was taken to the Hospital, where he lies in a critical condition. Deputy Chief Stewart, Inspector Ward and Constables Crowe, Cathers and Owens were struck with stones, Owens being badly hurt.

An unknown woman was seriously injured by a flying missile. Many of the rioters were severely punished by the police batons. Order was not restored until nearly midnight.

Additional particulars have been received of the death by drowning at Port Carling of Vivian Platt, Robert-street, one of the young lads who accompanied Rev. Mr. Smith to Muskoka on a camping expedition. It appears that on Tuesday morning Platt, with two younger companions, went boating contrary to the express orders of Mr. Smith. Platt, in a spirit of foolhardiness, seated himself on the gunwale and a sudden jerk of the boat caused him to overbalance himself and fall backward into the stream. His companions threw him both oars and a paddle, but owing to the velocity of the boat and the difficulty in turning it were unable to reach him before he had sunk. The body had not been recovered up to 6 o'clock last evening, although a posse with grappling irons have been searching ever since the accident.

Yesterday was announced the death from diphtheria of the four children of Mr. Andrew Judd of 34 Mitchell-avenue. For some days past the father of the children has been suffering from dysentery. The shock occasioned by the death of his little ones was too much for him to bear, and he died while a hearse was conveying the last two diphtheria victims to the cemetery. His remains will be buried to-day alongside those of his children in St. Michael's cemetery. Judd was in his 45th year and an honorary member of the Army and Navy Veterans and was a solo cornetist in the band. He was formerly connected with the 78th Highlanders.

THROWN OFF THE TRACK.

A Wreck on the Grand Trunk Near Park Hill—The Fireman Killed.

PARK HILL, Aug. 6.—A special through freight in charge of Conductor Thompson from Stratford, running at about 25 miles an hour, was thrown off the track about four miles west of here, killing the fireman named Cheesboro of St. Thomas, slightly injuring the engineer, also killing a valuable horse belonging to W. R. Croul. The engine and eight cars are a total wreck, besides the track being torn up for quite a piece. Engineer George Harland stuck to his post and escaped miraculously. Two auxiliary trains are clearing away the wreck, which will likely be finished before morning.

A WAIF AND A WANDERER.

The Story of Kemmler's Life—The Crime for Which he Died.

Kemmler was born in Philadelphia thirty years ago, brought up in ignorance, never learned a trade and for years has been a waif and a wanderer. He did not know whether he has a relative living, although shortly after he came to Auburn he received a letter from a man living in Ohio who was probably his uncle.

So he grew up like a lost child and naturally, because his father was a butcher, worked more at that than at anything else. It was the only business of which he had the least knowledge. Some three years ago in Camden, N.J., he married Ida Porter. The day after his wedding he learned that she had another husband living. Immediately he left her and ran away to Buffalo with Mrs. Tillie Zeigler. There he became at once a huckster and a drunkard. The woman, too, was cursed with a taste for liquor. They quarreled continually. She frequently stole his money, and, taken altogether, their life was as degraded as could be.

One night, crazy with drink, they had a row about a few cents, and he struck her on the head with an ax. Next day she was dead. That night, in the station-house cell, he was plied with liquor until he grew talkative, and told enough to convict himself. That is the whole story of his life, common enough in its beginning, and uncommon in its ending only because he was the first to die this new death ordained by the law.

The Argentine Revolution.

BUENOS AYRES, Aug. 6.—The President has been compelled by popular clamor to resign.

The Chambers have not accepted Celman's resignation. Complications are feared. Great excitement prevails.

Another instance of the friendly relations between England and Germany is that England has ordered one of her men-of-war to protect German interests at Buenos Ayres.

The Guatemalan Revolt.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 6.—The Guatemalan revolutionists, numbering 2000, were defeated Monday by Guatemalan regulars under General Pedro Barillas, brother of the President.

A Jumping Record Broken.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 6.—John H. Clausen, the jumper of the Boston Athletic Association, broke the record for the running hop, step and jump yesterday afternoon at Beacon Park. Although the track was somewhat slow Clausen's first trial resulted in a record of 42 feet 2½ inches. On the second attempt the official measurement was 43 feet and on the third and last trial he covered 44 feet 5 inches. This is 3½ inches better than the best previous record, which was held by Malcolm Ford, and was made in New York. The judges to-day were Eugene Buckley, J. S. Murphy, J. B. Connolly, John Graham and W. Barnes, all recognized local athletes. Clausen had trained for a week under Instructor Harry Cornish of the Boston Athletic Association.

Duncan C. Ross Heard From.

BOSTON, Aug. 6.—Duncan Ross, the athlete, who has been in Australia the past year, writes a friend here rather dolefully concerning that country. He does not think much of the Scotch games there, but says he has done very well owing to the fact that he has competed in many events. He now holds the championship of Australia, which he won in competition with Donald Dinnie and W. Kneebone. The matches were decided by points and in the end Ross was declared the winner with the aggregate of 585 points, Kneebone following with 577 and Dinnie with 570½. Upon leaving Australia Ross will go to India and then through Europe.

Shifting the Responsibility.

The railway accident had been a terrible one, and one of the men who were carrying the thirty-seventh victim up the embankment said with strong feeling:

"Somebody will have to pay dearly for all this!"

The mangled passenger opened his eyes and glared at the speaker.

"The company is not to blame," he said, feebly; "this is a dispensation of Providence!"

He was the attorney for the road.—Chicago Tribune.

OCEAN'S UNDERTOW.

It Is Not a Mystery, But a Very Simple Matter.

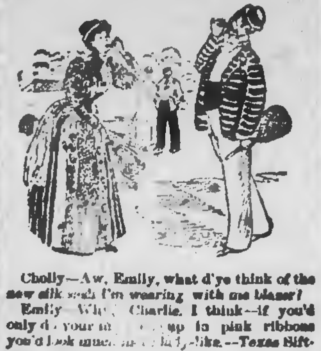
Frequenters of the seashore learn to speak of the "undertow," says Duffield Osborne in Scribner, as though it were some mysterious force working from the recesses of a treacherous ocean to draw unwary bathers to their doom. As a matter of fact, its presence is obviously natural, and the explanation of it more than simple. As each wave rolls in and breaks upon the beach the volume of water which it carries does not remain there and sink into the sand; it flows back again, and, as the succeeding wave breaks over it, the receding one forms an undercurrent flowing outward of strength proportionate to the body of water contained in each breaker, and, again, proportionate in a great measure to the depth of the ditch.

Where this latter is an appreciable depression, it can be readily seen that the water of receding waves will flow into it with similar effect to that water going over a fall, and that a person standing near it is very likely to be drawn over with it, and thus, if the ditch is deep enough, carried out of his depth. That is all there is to the much-talk-of "undertow" and the numerous accidents laid to its account.

Seasickness for a Cent.

At the Neuilly Fair in Paris the ladies have, among many devices for fun and money, a swinging boat in which a very good imitation of real mal de mer may be got up for the modest sum of 1 cent.

Her Advice.



Cholly—Aw, Emily, what d'ye think of the new silk sash I'm wearing with me blazer?

Emily—Why, Charlie, I think—if you'd only do your hair up in pink ribbons you'd look much more ladylike.—Texas Siftings.

TOO SENSITIVE BY HALF.

The Home-Coming of a Detroiter Who Had Been Absent Six Years.

Yesterday forenoon a tall, slim man, wearing a faded Greeley hat and well enveloped in a linen ulster of ancient date, entered the Woodbridge Street Station, says the Detroit Free Press, and said to the Sergeant:

"I just came in on the train. Look at me and see if I resemble Capt. Kidd, or Charley Ross."

"I can't see that you do," replied the Sergeant.

"But people are all looking at me and grinning. Anything wrong in my dress?"

"Well, the ulster—a duster is a little off, perhaps."

"Oh, it's the duster. People don't wear 'em any more, eh?"

"Not that style and color."

"I see. I'm a little ancient?"

"A trifle."

"Well, off she comes. I bought it in this town six years ago. The man wanted it as a combination of duster, hammock, flying-jib, liver pad, bed blanket, burglar alarm, life-preserver and certificate of moral character, and it has pulled me through a steamboat explosion, two railroad smashups, a hotel fire and half a dozen free fights. Kinder hate to go back on her, but style is style. If the style has changed then I've got to change with it."

He pulled it off rolled it into a bundle and laid it on a chair and said:

"Give it to some poor and disconsolate man—some one who hasn't a sensitive soul. It has kept out the flies, warded off moths, and saved me from rattlesnakes and mad dogs, but the time has come when we must part. When I strike Detroit and hear a boy call out 'Is that thing alive?' I know he means me and that duster. When I go up the street and a man calls out 'Schooner ahoy!' I know he means that duster and me. When I get into a car and see the women look me over and then hitch away, I know they are wondering which of us is who and whether it will bite or not. I'm too sensitive by half, but I can't help it. I leave her in your hands. Good-by."

How She Brought Him Around.

Softly shone the subdued light of the solitary gas-jet in the parlor of the Bilderback mansion on the avenue, and soft was the voice of the abashed young Erasmus Shackelford, who sat on the edge of his chair, mopped his heated face, and smiled with a kind of papier-mache smile at the entrancing young woman in the dazzling aureole of whose auburn hair he had fluttered in agonizing captivity for months and months.

"Miss Viola," he said, clearing his throat and speaking with every inflection of a man about to say something, "you will not be surprised, I presume, if I—if I express the—the feeling, the—the opinion, as it were, that—that it's pretty hot this evening?"

Erasmus gave his face another frenzied swipe with his handkerchief and subsided into palpitating silence.

"No," replied Miss Viola, with a smile that brought a large and ecstatic lump of something or other up into his throat, "I am not surprised, Mr. Shackelford. You made the same observation earlier in the evening."

"Y-yes," he gasped. "I believe I did. It—it was not an entirely new remark. In fact, it was a kind of a—of a chestnut, I suppose."

The agitated youth made another effort to crush down the lump in his throat.

"And I—I feel, Miss Bil—Viola—as if I were a—a kind of—of observation myself that was getting tiresome. Haven't I been—been observed here a little too often? Do I seem to be a—a chestnut"—and as he moved his handkerchief over his glowing face in tremulous jabs his voice took on a despairing sound—"a sort of—of roasted chestnut?"

"No, Erasmus," slowly answered the maiden. "When a chestnut is roasted it pops."

The conscientious historian is bound to record the fact that at this point Erasmus immediately popped.

At the Races.

They were at the Suburban, and the horses were at the post for the last event. He approached her hesitatingly.

"Mary," he said, "you will have to pay the car-fare home; I have had my pocket picked down there in that crowd again, confound it!"

"Oh, Ralph," she replied, "it's all my fault. I knew that I made that inside pocket in your vest too large."

And Satan who was so well pleased with the incident that he went down and invited a defunct bookmaker who had been a friend of his to a boiled champagne supper.—Life.

A Railway Under Water.

The most remarkable short line of railway in the world is probably the submerged railway at Onton, near Bilbao, described in the current part of Chambers' Journal. It runs down an evenly sloping shore in double line to a distance of 650 feet, and has been constructed by a Spanish engineer for the sole purpose of facilitating the shipment of iron ores. The only car is a massive iron tower on wheels in the shape of a pyramid rising 70 feet from the track.—London News.

Their Rest Disturbed.

Two men, Wm. McNamee and Jas. Harrison, were found lying in the park at about one o'clock last night by Constables Stewart and Moore. The constables took them in charge and gave them quarters in the cells. At the Court this morning they were charged with vagrancy, but the Magistrate allowed them to go with a caution.

Still Suffering.

The Toronto Mail of this morning says:—"The young man named Frank Nicholson, who was accidently shot with a 22-calibre rifle by a companion while near their camp on Stony Lake, is now at his home on Spencer avenue, Parkdale. The doctors have been unable to find the bullet. The young man suffers much pain. He refuses to tell the name of the young man whose carelessness was the cause of his injury."

Blocking the Sidewalk.

For some hours Thursday part of the sidewalk on George-st., between Simcoe and Charlotte, was blocked by the extensive stock of ale being brought in by W. J. Morrow. Several complaints were made, but Mr. Morrow after securing a large staff had it removed. The stock consists principally of the celebrated White Label, and the number of cars that have come to his address these few months past speaks volumes for the ale. d27w31

CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING.

The Dominion Building and Loan Association—A Local Board.

Mr. Pierce, of Toronto, an agent of the Dominion Building and Loan Association, is in town. This is an Association recently formed—which, in fact, only got its organization in a complete shape last week—but which has made wonderful progress. Similar Associations have been tested on a large scale both in Europe and America, and its promoters see in Canada a promising field for a national Association.

Mr. J. R. McWilliams, of Peterborough, is Vice-President of the Dominion Board. The requisite number of shares having been taken here a Local Board has been organized, constituted as follows:—

PRESIDENT.—Macfarlane Wilson.
SECRETARY.—A. V. R. Young.
SOLICITORS.—Stratton & Hall.
VALUATOR.—Wm. Aldridge.
COUNCIL.—Robert Fair, W. A. Henderson, F. J. Bell, Dr. Yelland, J. J. Hartley and F. J. Jameson.

In the United States there are five thousand building and loan associations. The savings in these associations are over $700,000,000. The claims on their behalf is that they offer the best facilities for borrowing and at the same time retain the interest otherwise paid to distant capitalists. Not the least of the benefits they confer is the habit of saving which they promote. Almost everyone with a very moderate income can, by reasonable economy and forethought, save enough monthly to pay for one or more shares, without lessening their comforts.

The authorized capital, but the letters of incorporation, is $5,000,000, divided into fifty thousand shares of $100 each. The shares are payable by monthly instalments of sixty cents per share, which will in twelve months amount to $7.20 per share. Profits arising from interest, fines, etc., are credited pro rata at stated times among the shareholders. When the amount of payments and accrued profits standing to the credit of a share equals its par value the stock will be matured and the owner will receive from the Association the face value of the stock. It is estimated that the stock will mature in seven years. The Dominion Bank is the depository of the Association, and the Trust Corporation of Ontario has been appointed its trustee. The profit sharing idea is at the basis of the Association, and judging by the experience of other countries it should have a good field.

Shot a Dog.

Mr. John E. Burgess, who lives in Otonabee just outside the town, complained to the police yesterday that on the evening previous a man who was driving past his place shot his dog. The dog, Mr. Burgess says, was at his gate and the man drew a revolver and shot it. The animal has since died.

Wedded at Campbellford.

A quiet wedding took place in the Roman Catholic church at Campbellford on Tuesday, says the Herald, at 5 a.m., when Miss S. Horkins, one of our most estimable young ladies, took the solemn vow with Mr. James McLaren, of Toronto. The happy couple left on the early train for Buffalo, accompanied as far as Peterborough by a few particular friends.

Lightning's Freaks.

Sunday last lightning struck the residence of Mr. James Scott, of Marmora, says the Intelligencer. Fortunately the family were away from home at the time, or some of them would doubtlessly have been killed. It is often said that lightning does not strike twice in the same place, but this is not the experience of Mr. Richardson, of Malone, who had a chimney struck the second time on Sunday last.

Y. M. C. A. CAMP.

An Association Formed at Stony Lake—The Services.

Correspondence of the Review.

STONY LAKE, August 6, 1890.

The first meeting of the Camp on Juniper Island was held on Sabbath morning, when Rev. David Reddick, of Port Hope, preached a very thoughtful sermon from John 1, 1-4 and 14th verses, "Christ's divinity and humanity." It was much enjoyed by the large congregation present. Rev. Messrs. Walter Roger, London; John Trotter, Claremont; and Messrs. Cole and G. E. Williams, Kingston, assisted at the service.

Owing to the severe storm in the afternoon and threatening indications of another storm, the attendance at the Camp Fire in the evening was not large. We regret it was so, for the Rev. B. Canfield Jones, Port Hope, gave an excellent sermon from John xix, 5, "Behold the Man." All who had this delightful privilege will not soon forget the theme, Christ our personal Friend and Saviour.

On Monday morning a meeting was held for the purpose of organizing a permanent association; so that in the future we shall be able to present a complete programme and also have those present who are leaders in Christian work to give addresses. All present thought it was very desirable to do so. The name will be the "Young Men's Christian Association Camp, Stony Lake." The following were elected officers:—

PRESIDENT.—Mr. T. S. Cole, Toronto.
VICE-PRESIDENT.—Rev. W. M. Roger, London.
TREASURER.—Mr. G. M. Roger, Peterborough.
SECRETARY.—Mr. R. J. Colville, Peterborough.
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Messrs. G. E. Williams, Kingston; J. W. Bennet, Peterborough, and F. B. Utley, Lindsay, and the officers.

The following programme was arranged for this meeting, as follows:—Owing to the stormy weather it was impossible to hold the meetings Monday and Tuesday. Wednesday morning at 9.30 Mr. G. E. Williams, Kingston, gave a Bible reading on the work of the Holy Spirit in the believers. Rev. W. M. Roger will give a Bible reading on Thursday, and Mr. T. S. Cole on Friday on "Nehemiah's Enemies, our Enemies;" Saturday, Rev. Jno. Trotter, Clairmont; Sunday morning service, Rev. W. M. Roger; Sunday afternoon at Mr. Thos. Bradburn's cottage, Boschink, at 3 p. m., Messrs. Cole and Williams; Monday morning, Rev. B. Canfield Jones; Tuesday morning, R. J. Colville; Wednesday morning, G. E. Williams; Thursday, T. S. Cole; Friday, Rev. W. M. Roger.

Camp fires will be held on Thursday and Saturday evenings, when Rev. Mr. Roger will give a talk on geology. We purpose holding a musical evening early next week.

St. John's Fence.

The stone fence in front of the St. John's church grounds is being rebuilt in a substantial manner in cement. Mr. Robert Smith has the contract. The grounds, which are well attended to, look beautiful.

Societies at Service.

The 'Prentice Boys and Orangemen will attend divine service at the George-st. Methodist church next Sunday evening, the Sunday previous to the anniversary of the closing of Derry's gates. Other societies have been invited.

The Lakefield Bridge.

Mr. James Bogue, who has the contract for the masonry of the repairs to the Lakefield bridge, will begin the work next week. An abutment will be built each end and a pier in the centre. There will be about 350 yards of masonry. Mr. Law has the contract for raising the bridge that the piers may be built and lowering it. The bridge will be open to traffic while the work is going on.

The E. B. A. at Toronto.

A large delegation of members of the Peterborough branch of the Emerald Beneficial Association went to Toronto yesterday and took part in the celebration of the anniversary of Daniel O'Connell's birth. The Toronto papers say the Peterborough branch turned out thirty strong. There was a large procession of the Associations through the streets of the Queen City to Moss Park, where addresses were delivered and sports carried out. The celebration was a very successful one.

A Children's Outing.

Yesterday the children of the Sunday school which meets in the northwestern part of Ashburnham were given an outing. Mr. John Carlisle, Mrs. Smart and others, members of the Christian Alliance, organized the school this summer and it is attended by quite a number of children. The outing was held on the east side of Armour's hill, and there were nearly a hundred children present. The afternoon was spent in different amusements and tea was served in the evening. The children enjoyed the day greatly.

Personal.

Capt. Annesley and family, late of the Hazel Brae Home, arrived in England on July 31st. They had a pleasant voyage, except that for a time the vessel was delayed byfog.

The Meyersburg correspondent of the Herald says:—"Mrs. Huffman, Miss Huffman, and Miss Alford, from Peterborough, are visiting at Mr. John Bateson's; also calling on other friends in the neighborhood. They expect to remain three or four weeks, enjoying their vacation, as they cannot find any more romantic place than Meyersburg."

August 12th at Belleville.

Referring to the demonstration at Belleville, in which the Peterborough 'Prentice Boys will take part, the Intelligencer says:—"The local lodge of 'Prentice Boys are making great preparations for the celebration in this city on Tuesday next, 12th August. There will be Orangemen, 'Prentice Boys and True Blues from this and other counties. The coming demonstration is expected to be one of the largest that has been held in this city for some time. A lengthy programme of games has been prepared which will take place at the Agricultural Park, for which valuable prizes have been contributed. A grand procession will be formed on the market square at 1.30 p.m. and march through the principal streets to the grounds."

THE SAULT RAILWAY.

A Minden Gentleman's Views—Connection With Important Industrial Sections.

A resident of Minden who was in Peterborough this week expressed great interest in the proposed railway from Lake Ontario to the Sault and in conversation with the REVIEW he said that the people of Haliburton county felt a deep interest in the project. This gentleman explained some of the advantages this railway would give the people of that section and also the corresponding benefit it would be to Peterborough. At present Minden has no railway, the Haliburton line being eight miles from that village, and besides the people of that section desire very much to have railway connection with Peterborough in order that they may trade here. Lindsay is interested in getting a railway from the Canadian Pacific at Pontypool into that town and it is proposed to run it on to Bobcaygeon. This Lindsay line would give railway communication to Bobcaygeon and that neighborhood, but again the people of Harvey and Galway desire to have communication with Peterborough. In Galway there are minerals, and if the proposed road from Peterborough ran along the line of or through that township, as it doubtless would, it would aid the settlers and the settlement of that township and give an opening to the minerals, and would, of course, benefit the intervening country.

In the southern townships of Haliburton county there are a large number of settlers whose trade does not now reach Peterborough, although they are directly north of this. Their railway connection leads them to other places. This railway, the Minden gentleman pointed out, if it ran to Minden, would cross the Haliburton line and connect with the Irondale railway. This would give the trade of this section a direct outlet to Peterborough, and would give railway connection with the

of the townships of Snowden and Monmouth. The Brockville, Westport and Sault railway was surveyed through this district and there are two lines surveyed from Minden to the Sault. If one of these lines was followed, the road would touch upon the great black birch country of northern Haliburton and would connect with the Gull lake waters that branch out through the birch section. It would also run through the pine country north and west of Minden, and this country is all within trading distance of this town. It would also strike the village of Dorset, in the northwest of Haliburton. This point is little known here, yet it occupies a position in relation to the lumber business of that section similar to the relation Peterborough formerly held to north of here. It is situated on an arm of the Lake of Bays, on which a lumber firm has two steamers. There is a large lumber interest in this section, and it is a point of importance. From this point on the railway would traverse the immense tract through Muskoka, Nipissing and Algoma, with its forests, minerals and lands awaiting settlers.

THE LUMBER INDUSTRY

Here is a great opening for a railway and one which would give additional importance to this town, develop trade and draw to it business that now goes into other channels. Apart from the through and colonization character of the railway, our Minden informant says that the trade of the Minden section and of southern Haliburton would at once come here when communication was established, besides the trade of intervening sections that would be turned in this direction, and those townships would be greatly benefitted, as there are large sections at present unserved by a railway. In addition to this would be the possibilities that would arise through the connection with the lumber region further north.

From the commencement of the proposed line, on its way to Bobcaygeon, until it reached out into Haliburton and Muskoka and found its way to the Sault, it would seem that it would be of an importance to this town that should encourage its promoters and bring them every aid and encouragement.

Cool Apparel for Men.

Men complain of their close apparel, flannel and silk being oppressive for city wear. Lisle thread undergarments of thread so smooth and cool it feels like linen, and shirts of linen lawn with cuffs of two-ply linen only, and coats of Japanese crape cotton in white or ecru, with scant stripes of crimson and sky blue, or terra cotta and verdigris, or black and white, carry out the fullest idea of coolness.

No vest is worn by young men even in shops and business offices, the wide folds of silk or thin wool buckled around the waist being too comfortable to exchange for starched duck. Starch in Summer is inimical to coolness and rare artistic unconventional souls are taking to the lawn and cambric ties which look so picturesque. If women don't assist this innovation by approval and compliment they deserve less at the hands of the other sex than they think.

But it is safe to say that for all but formal dress the shirt front of single linen which needs the least starch in the world and the full cool tie of India muslin in lieu of a collar is the artistic style. And if the trousers for yachting and camping or the seaside recall pajama, I suggest that the male half of creation has taken to wearing the divided skirt, what cannot be tolerated, nay, encouraged, for the sake of coolness when people are so much more amiable for being comfortable.

But Time Flies.

A Rejoinder from Mr. McWilliams.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—By the REVIEW of the 5th inst. I see Mr. J. Graham Weir has been drinking Stony Lake water again and it has had the usual effect, viz., of making him rush into print.

It has taken Mr. J. Graham Weir several weeks to recover from the last dressing he received and which he so richly deserved. Had he not the hide of a rhinoceros he would never want to see J. Graham Weir in print again. Never was there an untruthful man so thoroughly exposed. Mr. Weir insinuates that Mr. Moore or I was the writer of a letter signed "Orangeman." I can inform Mr. J. Graham Weir that neither of us ever wrote, nor had anything whatever to do with that letter, and have no doubt the writer will give his name if required. I can inform Mr. J. Graham Weir, if he does not already know it, that J. R. McWilliams is not made of the kind of material that it is necessary for him to hide his name when either attacking or replying to J. Graham Weir.

My horse-whipping of Mr. Colbeck appears to trouble Mr. Weir. Is it on the principle that a burnt child dreads the fire? He appears to have a very vivid recollection, not only of the many horse-whippings he received before coming to maturity, but also of one he received after his marriage from a friend who still thought he should keep a fatherly eye over him.

Had Mr. J. Graham Weir been blessed with one or two children he would understand a father's feelings when he saw a coward take revenge on a delicate child for ill-will against the father. If necessary, I could prove that Mr. J. Graham Weir has been as inconsistent and untruthful in his statements regarding my horse-whipping Mr. Colbeck as he was in the course taken by him in Mr. Bicnard's election.

Mr. J. Graham Weir is so inconsistent that the Orangemen should appoint a committee to take charge of him or he will be celebrating the 17th of March and then attempt to prove it is the 12th of July. I understand Mr. J. Graham Weir has a summer cottage at Stony Lake, near the Dummer shore, and I can inform him that the Dummer boys are good-hearted, and on account of the position he holds at present in the Orange society, would make arrangements to furnish him regularly every day with pure spring water, rather than have him making a fool of himself every few weeks.

Yours, &c.,
J. R. MCWILLIAMS.

WHY HE LOVED A STAMP.

A Little Two-Center Once Helped an Actor Out of a Hole.

"Never say lick a stamp; say moisten it," observed H. C. Berrien, a member of a theatrical troupe stopping at the Leland Hotel, says the Chicago Post.

"I make the request because I have an affection for a stamp; particularly for a two-cent one, and when I hear you say lick, it jars me.

"What engendered my affection! Not long ago I was playing in Brooklyn. It was about the end of the season, and the ghost not having walked for several weeks there was not a dollar in the crowd and I was financially flat on my back. I had expected a remittance from home but the postoffice had no letter for me.

"I haunted it from Monday morning until Saturday, but still no letter. It then occurred to me that possibly the letter had been sent to New York City, and I started for the bridge, but at the gate I discovered I hadn't the requisite one cent for toll. I needed two, one to get back on, but several explorations through my pockets failed to discover a copper.

In an absent-minded way I looked in my letters, and my heart bounded at the sight of a two-cent stamp which a creditor had inclosed for my use in remitting a check.

"As I had no check, and did not expect to have for some time, I felt no compunctions in using the stamp. I went to a saloon and offered it for sale. But the bartender said he never wrote letters and didn't want it.

"I went into a grocery store, but the woman thought the stamp was counterfeit, and I barely had time to rush out before a policeman whom she called arrived.

"Then I tackled a street-car conductor. He asked me for my fare by way of reply, and when I told him I hadn't any money he pushed me off the car, and the crowd on the platform grinned.

"Then I tackled a policeman, to whom I explained my desperate situation and asked him to buy my stamp, assuring him I would consider it a great favor and pass him into the show to boot. He handed me a nickle to get changed for him, and, that being done, he gave me two cents, and off I dashed for the bridge.

"When I reached the post-office I must have been the picture of despair, for the clerk handed my letter and cashed the money-order it contained without asking me to be identified. Half an hour later I was on the outside of the first square meal I had seen for two weeks, and, until the ghost walked again, I was happy. It is because of this that I ask you to say moisten instead of lick."

The one addressed said moisten, then licked the stamp and stuck it on his letter.

KNOW HOW —TO— KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the profs.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders. They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

The surgeon started slightly, and [illegible] bowed his head. A few moments he remained thus, and then he leaped up and clasped his hands.

"By the Living God of all things," he cried, "it is! it! There is no burning up, as I thought, of icy, wintry fire; but the hellish work is from a human hand! Hold! —I know the symptoms. I know them now. Be quiet, Conrad. It may not yet be too late."

As the surgeon spoke he hastily opened a small leathern case he carried with him, and from thence he took a powerful emetic. The woman was sent for, and when she came she obtained warm water. The potion was given a small quantity at a time—at intervals of about five minutes, until the desired effect was produced. A strange mass of stuff was thrown up, and Kopani took it to the light and examined it. Most of it was of dark, brownish color, but with streaks of yellow, and coarse blotches of red and green. The yellow substance was of a mucous formation, while the red and green seemed to be more liquid.

"'Tis poison!" the surgeon said; "and it has been administered in small quantities."

"And cannot something be done?" asked Ruric, eagerly. "Oh, save him if you can! Save him and I'll bless you ever. You can—oh, say you can!"

The surgeon caught the youth by the hand. There was something in this noble spirit that moved him—and he knew now that all must have been forgiven between the two men.

"I'll try," he said, "I have antidotes with me. By heavens, all is not lost yet."

"Then hasten," urged Ruric, half crazed beneath the weight of the great discovery which he had thus helped to make.

"Be not uneasy. I will see that he suffers not for want of human skill." And as the surgeon thus spoke he moved to the sideboard and mixed an antidote; but he did not give it until the invalid had vomited all he could.

"Hold!" cried Ruric, as the surgeon took up the wine to mix the antidote with. "Touch not a thing here. Perhaps the villain has poisoned them all!"

"So it may be," Kopani said, setting down the bottle. He then turned to the woman who had remained standing by the fire like one in a trance, and asked her to bring a fresh bottle of wine. She quickly obeyed, and when she was gone Kopani took all the articles upon the table and set them on one side. He would not throw them away, for he meant to analyze them.

When the woman returned Kopani mixed the new potion, and administered it, and ere long afterwards the count fell asleep.

"Ruric Nevel," said the surgeon, as soon as he was sure the invalid would sleep, "will you remain here awhile? I wish to go and analyze some of these these things. I have only to go to the Academy. I will be back in an hour at the furthest."

The gun-maker gladly consented to this; and having gathered up the phials and the wine-bottle, and concealed them beneath his pelisse, the surgeon left.

Ruric Nevel was happier now, for hope was with him while he prayed that God might spare the unfortunate count.

CHAPTER XI.

Half an hour had the gun-maker sat by the side of the sick man's bed, when he was aroused from the reverie into which he had fallen by the gentle opening of the door. He turned and beheld a human form emerging from the narrow, dark entry-way. As it came into the room the watcher started, for he beheld the humpbacked priest, Savotano.

"Who is here?" the arch fiend whispered, shading his eyes and trying to peer into the gloom.

"———sh!" uttered Ruric. "The count is asleep."

By this time our hero had so far overcome the first emotion caused by the villain's entrance that he could be calm.

"And who is this?" the priest whispered, moving nearer to the bed. "Ha! The gun-maker!"

"Yes," replied the youth, watching every look and movement of the fellow most closely.

"You are in a strange place, I should say," then whispered Savotano, not looking the young man directly in the face, but casting upon him a sidelong glance, as though he dared not look direct.

"Speak not too loud, sir priest," said our hero, determined to enter into no conversation with the man if he could avoid it. "Do not awaken the count, for he is very faint and weak."

And then Ruric had another reason. He feared if Damonoff should awake, that the strange discovery they had made might be revealed; and of course he wished not that the villain should yet know how well he was understood.

"But why are you here?" pursued Savotano, who seemed determined to know. "I am this poor man's spiritual comforter, and I surely have a right to know wherefore is the presence of one bearing the peculiar relations towards him which are sustained by you."

Ruric's first impulse was one of disgust and wrath, but he managed to keep it to himself.

"Sir priest," he returned, moving his chair noiselessly nearer to the visitor, so that his whisper might not disturb the sleeper, "I heard that the count was dying, and I would not have him die without first forgiving me for all that I have done."

"And has he done it?"

"He has."

"And why do you remain here? Where is his attendant?"

"She is out somewhere. The count has had a strange fit—a startling spasm—and I feared if he had another the woman could not manage him alone."

"Ah," uttered Savotano. "A spasm?"

"Yes—a most strange one—as though something were at his heart—as though his brain were on fire, and his whole system shaking."

The priest turned his head away, but Ruric saw plainly the exultant look which rested there. There was no mistaking any more. That one look—for Ruric saw it—was proof enough.

"Well, well," the misshapen villain said, "I will call again when he is awake. I would not have him die, and I not by him."

Thus speaking Savotano arose and moved towards the door. His step was eager, and his every look betrayed some anxious purpose. He stopped as he reached the door and looked back, but he did not speak. Ruric was afraid he might go to the sideboard to look at the medicine, but he did not. He simply cast one more glance at the watcher, and then left the room.

In half an hour the surgeon returned. His face wore a close, emphatic expression, and his movements were all quick and prompt, as though each one was for the purpose of announcing some self-evident decision.

"Well," he uttered, with a quickly drawn breath, "we have put the medicines to a test." And then he leaned back and looked into Ruric's face.

"And what did you find?" the young man asked.

"Just what we had expected. We have detected arsenic in three of the medicines which the count had to take; but this poison is not alone. There is much opium in the wine, even so that we could smell it when our suspicions guided us. The poison has been most adroitly fixed. The priest must have one of those receipts which have been used by scientific poisoners, for no physician in Moscow could have concocted the deadly potion.

Rosenbaum—Shelup me, Vatter Abraham! vat does the man want? I saidt dose colors was fast ant dey run. Do you think dey oughter fly, or go by steam, or somedings like dot?—Bostonian.

High Water.

Uncle Tumbleton—Then you think Florida is a great State? But tell me, Tom, how is the water?

Tom Tumbleton—The fact is, uncle, I did not touch any.

Uncle Tumbleton—(suspiciously)—So bad as that!

Tom Tumbleton—Too expensive, uncle. Don't you know that Florida water is 50 cents a bottle?—Gray's Monthly.

Force of Habit.

"Thomas, what is ophthalmia?" asked Speaker Reed's wife.

"I don't know," replied the Speaker; "but the eyes have it."—Life.

He Needed Cement.

Peddler—Can I sell you some patent cement, sir?

Mr. Seedie—Cement! What do I want with cement?

Peddler—Well, you look as if you was broke.—Boston Courier.

Her Daughter's Literature.

Mrs. Jaysmith—What are you reading, Lou?

Miss Jaysmith—Pope's poems, ma.

Mrs. Jaysmith—Are they the poems of the present Pope or the last?—Judge.

Caused by a Wife's Extravagance.

Bellows—Been on a spree again, old fellow!

Fellows—Yes, my wife drove me to it. She insisted on having a new five-dollar bonnet, and I, who always economize, got so badly vexed that I took comfort in drink.

"What did the spree cost?"

"Oh! let me see; not over $20.—Epoch.

Ivory in Stacks.

"Much money made now in the West?"

Winn—How is it you smoke so many cigars now? Thought you always smoked a pipe at home.

Fogg—I used to, but we've got a new servant girl and she won't allow pipe smoking.—Jester.

Ought to be Larger.

Johnny Cumso—Papa, isn't the Cape of Good Hope many times its original size now?

Cumso—What makes you ask that question?

Johnny Cumso—Well, I know that it has been doubled often.—Epoch.

Make the Best of Everything.

"O, dear, such weather!" exclaimed Gazzam as he gazed at the perennial rain.

"You ought to be thankful that we have any weather at all," replied Mrs. Gazzam, who had been taught to look at the bright side of everything.—Judge.

Bomb Proof.

Czar of Russia (just out of bed)—What has become of my undershirt?

Valet—Please, Your Majesty, the blacksmith's putting fresh rivets in it."—Judge.

One Customer.

Wife—What is this mending and repairing company that is advertised in the papers, John?

Husband—It is a company that has been formed to meet a long-felt want. Garments in need of repair and buttons and things are taken in and fixed for a small sum.

Wife—A good thing for bachelors, I should say.

Husband—And for married men, too, my dear; for married men, too.

Then, after attaching his pantaloons to his suspender with a safety-pin, he went out on the stoop to see what kind of a night it was.—Boston Courier.

Household Hints.

Boil clothespins in [illegible] water [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible] will [illegible].

Once [illegible] [illegible] is [illegible] for use. [illegible] is far richer when the oxygen is [illegible].

Save the small paper bags carefully which groceries come in; they are [illegible] [illegible]. Slip the hand in one when you black the stove, and you will not soil it. When [illegible], slip them over the globe lamp chimneys during the day. After fruit is canned draw them over the can, and label them plainly; the action of the light causes more fruit to spoil than any other one thing.

Beat an egg thoroughly in a bowl and add one teacup of cold water to it. Use enough of this to thoroughly moisten coffee while making it. Keep in a cold place, and waste no more eggs by drying.

Granulated sugar is the purest brand; consequently the cheapest. Do not use quite as much as of other kinds—one-half inch less for a cupful. Cake batter made with granulated sugar requires longer beating than usual, as the sugar is longer in dissolving.

To beat the white of eggs stiff, with ease, they should be cold, with a very small pinch of salt added.

Egg-shells are somewhat porous, and like butter and cheese absorb unpleasant odors. Therefore, eggs should be kept in a sweet clean, cool place.

All floor and whisk brooms should be thoroughly wet in scalding hot brine before using them. It will effectually prevent the straws from breaking.

Add two tablespoonfuls of kerosene to the pail of water with which you wash grained or other varnished furniture.

Cut a piece from the top of old kid shoes and insert it inside the iron-holder you are going to make.

Make boiled starch with a weak soap-suds made of white soap, instead of with clear water, and you will have no difficulty with its sticking.

Do not wring woolen underware through a wringer. Use the hands and shake it thoroughly before drying. When perfectly dry fold it smoothly, but do not iron. See if the oder is not more agreeable than when a hot sad-iron has passed over them.

Never slice apples for making pies; quarter and core, and if an apple is large cut each quarter in two pieces.

Sift a tablespoonful of pulverized sugar over the top of two crust pies before baking, and see how delicious it makes them.

Never put tea leaves on a light colored carpet; they will surely leave a stain.

After thoroughly sweeping a dingy carpet, wipe it with a damp cloth partially wrung out of a mixture of water and ox-gall in the proportion of two tablespoonfuls of the latter to a gallon of lukewarm water.

In packing bottles or canned fruit for moving, slip a rubber band over the body of them.

A small tablespoonful of powdered borax added to a bowl of cold starch will give more stiffness to linen than any of the nefarious things I have tried.

When you are hurried and a postage stamp will not stick, moisten it and rub it on the flap of an envelope, and then quickly put it in its place.

Mix stove blacking with spirits of turpentine. It will take off the rust, polish easier, and stay glossy longer than when water is used.

Add a tablespoonful of borax to a pan of hot soap-suds; put your table silver in it, and let it stand two hours. Rinse it with clear water, and polish with a soft cloth or chamois.

Warm dishes for the table by immersing them in hot water, not by standing them on a hot stove.

Coffee boiled longer than one minute is coffee spoiled.—Catherine B. Johnson.

DUSTING WILL DISAPPEAR.

An Invention Which Absorbs Vermin and Dust.

We have a friend in the trade whose mind is continually running to labor saving inventions, says the Upholsterer. He has now arranged a series of fans so as to produce a suction that will draw up dust from the floors or furnishings of a house. Hear him:

"The motor is simple, and one has only to put the machine in the center of the room, wind her up, then get out of the way. When in motion the dust comes from all parts of the room and is immediately sucked up by the fans into a box. In two minutes it will sweep a room of ordinary size. After sweeping your floors you reverse the force, so as to have the suction come from the top instead of the bottom. Place a funnel over the machine which has a long hose attached, then you go around your furniture. Wherever you hold the hose the dust is immediately sucked through into the box. In five minutes there is not a particle of dust to be seen around the rooms. Besides collecting the dust, this machine will collect all the insects of a house. Imagine for a moment the ceiling of your room being filled with mosquitoes. Bring in your lightning cleaner, set the hose and draw it across the ceiling, and the mosquitoes disappear."

THE TORONTO BUDGET.

STANDING OF THE HIGH SCHOOLS IN THE UNIVERSITY LISTS.

An Owen Sound Boy Heads the Honor Lists and Takes a Double Scholarship —A Queen's Park Sunday Orator Fined —A Cannibal Punished.

TORONTO, Aug. 8.—The Queen's Park orator, familiarly known as "Jumbo Campbell," was fined $5 and costs at the Police Court yesterday on a charge of indecent and insulting language. Campbell was in the habit of holding forth in the park on Sunday afternoons against the Roman Catholics and the charge was preferred by the police. He will enter an appeal and was admitted to bail.

The defeat of the bylaw to grant the aid of $200,000 to help in rebuilding Toronto University is the subject of considerable discussion here. The vote was a defeating one generally, and it is the subject of comment here that while many other countries contributed aid to rebuilding of the university, Toronto city, that should naturally be most interested in the institution, refused to contribute a cent.

Jake Ryan, a deck hand on the steamer John Hanlan, is earning considerable notoriety as a life saver. On Aug. 3 he was instrumental, with two other members of the crew, in rescuing two men and a woman from drowning opposite the Brock-street elevator, and yesterday saved another life. While playing around the Northern elevator with a companion, a 12-year-old lad named Richard Bond fell off the wharf. Ryan observed the accident and dived from the steamer's deck to the rescue. The boy had been in the water several minutes before Ryan could locate him and he was unconscious when taken out, but was resuscitated.

The Senate of the University of Toronto met yesterday afternoon and adopted the report of the examiners in the June matriculation. About 350 candidates were examined. Of these 235 matriculated completely; 37 have to take a supplemental examination in September; 19 others will pass on the presentation of II. class certificates from the education department; in all 281 were successful in obtaining a university standing in arts. Thirty-four failed outright, but have an opportunity of presenting themselves again in September.

The man of the year is John Herbert Brown from Owen Sound Collegiate Institute, who stands first in honor classics, mathematics, English, history and geography and German and sixth in French. This is an extraordinarily good placing. He wins the Mary Mulock classical scholarship and the Prince of Wales scholarship.

Crediting each student who comes from two schools to each school it will be found that the 295 who succeeded or partially succeeded in passing either in arts or medicine were distributed among the schools about thus: Toronto Collegiate Institute, 26; Upper Canada College, 22; Hamilton, 14; St. Thomas, 13; Parkdale, 12; Private Tuition, 10; Ridgetown and London, 9 each; Woodstock and Lindsay, 8 each; Ottawa, 7; Owen Sound, St. Catharines, Aylmer, Port Perry, 6 each; Newmarket, Oshawa, Guelph, Barrie, St. Mary's, 5 each; Mount Forest, Strathroy, Stratford, Clinton, Dunnville, Walkerton, Welland, 4 each; Berlin, Brockville, Brampton, Brantford, Elora, Galt, Georgetown, Harriston, Ingersoll, Markham, Simcoe, Wardsville, 3 each; Arnprior, Dutton, Fergus, Glencoe, Goderich, Mitchell, Norwood, Orangeville, Parkhill, Sarnia, Uxbridge, Morvyn, House, Toronto, two each; Athens, Bowmanville, Cobourg, Collingwood, Campbellford, Chatham, Cayuga, Dundas, Kemptville, Kincardine, Morrisburg, Perth, Picton, Port Elgin, Pembroke, Preston, Richmond Hill, Smithville, Seaforth, Stirling, Streetsville, Trenton, Weston, Whitby, Miss Dupont's, Trinity College, Port Hope; Ladies' College, Whitby; Bishop Ridley, St. Catharines; St. Michael's, Toronto; Bishop Strachan, one each.

John O'Connor is a tough and a dangerous fellow generally, who has occasionally appeared before the magistrate. Yesterday the offence slated against him was brutally assaulting Patrick Conroy and chewing off part of his thumb. He was sentenced to 30 days' imprisonment without the option of a fine.

BLEW UP THE STORE.

A Clerk's Carelessness Causes a Powder Explosion at Liverpool, N.S.

LIVERPOOL, N.S., Aug. 7.—A terrible explosion occurred here at 8 o'clock this morning. James Warman, a clerk in Colin Campbell's hardware store, set fire to some powder which was spilt on the floor and it ran quickly to the keg, which was close by, and caught at once and in a second the building was a complete wreck, blowing the front and side into the street. Fire at once started, but was soon out. Forbes' and McNutt's stores just opposite the building had their fronts blown out and every pane of glass shattered to atoms. The boy lies in a very serious condition, but the doctors think he will recover. Another lad, who was in the store at the time, was badly burned. Loss about $1000.

AN ODD CRAFT'S CRUISE.

QUARTER OF A MILE IN LENGTH WITH SIXTEEN JOINTS.

Particulars of the Exciting Voyage of the Latest Leary Lumber Raft From St. John, N.B., to New York—A Profitable Venture.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—As the big black snake, which has journeyed all the way from St. John, N.B., came to a halt in Flushing Bay at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, there was an animated tooting of whistles from every steamboat within eyeshot. Excursion boats and pleasure yachts veered from their course to get a closer look at the strange object, and many people in rowboats "made fast" to its long body and playfully ran backward and forward upon its broad though slippery spine. It was the only opportunity anybody will have for amusement of that sort, for to-day this 1400 foot traveler of the deep was cut into three sections and towed in pieces down through Hell Gate, and thence up Newtown and Whale Creeks to the shipyard of Mr. Leary, the famous raft-builder of modern times.

Of course the thing which has been creeping along through the waters of the Atlantic Ocean and Long Island Sound ever since July 26 in tow of two powerful ocean tugboats is not really (as it has all the time looked to be) a sea serpent, but is as a matter of fact a vast collection of seventy-foot New Brunswick timbers commercially known as "Leary's raft, No. 4." The idea of collecting an enormous quantity of logs and so welding them together as to constitute one seaworthy craft appears to have originated in the active brain of Mr. Leary. A former effort of his to transport logs in this manner to the New York market was, as will be remembered, a failure. The raft went to pieces in mid-ocean and the truant timbers, waifs on the broad ocean, were for some time a menace and danger to navigators. But Mr. Leary was not daunted and afterwards succeeded in safely bringing into this port a couple of stupendous rafts.

The curious ocean traveler, which was this morning lying in Flushing Bay, is his latest successful attempt at this form of timber transportation.

It was as long ago as June 10 that the two tugs B. T. Haviland and E. Heipenhausen, belonging to Capt. Joseph Laughlin's well-known towing line, steamed out of this city, bound for St. John, N.B., to bring the latest and biggest Leary raft to this port. A crew of nine men manned each of the tugs and the captains of the Heipenhausen and Haviland were Walter P. Crosby and W. Daly. St. John was reached on June 15, and on June 17 the westward journey was begun. The raft as it left St. John consisted of seventeen sections or separate bunches of timber, the average length of the timbers being 70 feet. In Mr. Leary's first raft the unhewed tree-trunks had been solidly welded together by chains into a single enormous cigar-shaped craft. The present raft, or rather rafts, were differently constructed. A certain number of logs (or tree trunks they really should be called) were bound together by iron chains, making a raft just the natural length of the timbers and drawing between nine and ten feet of water. Through the core or centre of this raft ran an immense iron cable, upon which sixteen other rafts, also the natural length of the timbers, were constructed.

Great tripods were erected upon the raft at regular intervals, from which were suspended lanterns that were kept brightly burning each night.

The start from St. John was made in good weather, but on the second day out a heavy fog set in and for two days and nights the people in the tug-boats didn't obtain even so much as a glimpse of the elongated thing behind them. When on June 19 the fog lifted it was perceived that the last two sections were missing. They were never found. The tug commanders, fearing a further curtailment of their tow, concluded to make the first harbor and at once headed for Frenchman's Bay, but as the weather continued good they decided to continue to Rockland, Me. They reached Rockland June 21 and remained there 11 days strengthening the lashings of the rafts. They left Rockland July 2, and on the following day saw, to their consternation, that another section of the tow was breaking up and going to pieces in the high seas that prevailed. They at once made for Portland, Me., where they arrived on July 4.

It was estimated that two weeks, at least, would be required to make the shaky timber snake secure for a further sea journey, and both tugs at once returned to New York.

On July 22 the tugs left this port for Portland again to attempt the risky feat of bringing the raft to the New York market. Capt. Daly of the B. F. Haviland was succeeded by bluff old Capt. Reuben Ireland, who confessed yesterday that he was homesick throughout the trip.

The second start of the raft was made from Portland, Me., on Monday, July 26. When off Cape Cod the sea began to rise and assert itself. Breaker after breaker, mountain high, arose and jumped violently down upon this elongated and unfamiliar object in the sea. The man whose arduous duty it was to light the lamps swinging from the tripods on the raft could not perform his task. The raft became an almost submerged reef in mid-ocean. Fortunately the gale and high seas did not continue, and on July 30 Handkerchief Lightship was passed. The next day, nevertheless, had plenty of threatening weather in store, and it was thought wise to anchor at Holmes's Hole. After bobbing around at Holmes's Hole all day Friday the big lumber snake resumed its journey on Saturday, Aug. 2. At 4½ o'clock that afternoon Cuttyhunk was passed and the next, Sunday, morning the strange sea traveler was off Newport. Fortunately the sea around Point Judith was light. The run along the Rhode Island coast was uneventful. Watch Hill was passed before supper time and early in the evening Fisher's Island Sound, and consequent security was reached. The raft was off Cornfield Light at 9.50 on Monday morning and passed New Haven at 8.10 that evening. Stratford Shoal Lightship was reached at an early hour Tuesday morning, and the remarkable procession came to anchor, as before announced, at 7½ o'clock Tuesday evening in Hempstead Bay and proceeded yesterday to its present anchorage in Flushing Bay.

Although the charge for towing this raft from New Brunswick to New York will approach $12,500, and although three sections of the raft were lost on the voyage, Mr. Leary's profit in the venture is still said to be large. Most of the timbers will be used as piles in filling up the Astor property on the shores of the Harlem River.

Galt Votes $125,000 for Waterworks.

A CONVICT EMEUTE.

Prisoners at the Charleston (Mass.) State Prison Raise a Revolt.

BOSTON, Aug. 7.—For some time trouble has been brewing at the Charleston State Prison, owing to the objection of the inmates to the Bertillon system of measurements. This afternoon the convicts in the harness shop, numbering over 100, refused to obey orders, and all at once set up a terrific yell and missiles of every description were sent flying in all directions, the windows on the north and west sides being demolished. Then they dashed forth into the yard and rushed for the walls. The sentries began firing, other prison officials were quickly at hand and with drawn revolvers soon massed the men in groups after a hard fight in which clubs were freely used and many convicts' heads badly crushed. About fifty city police arrived and the convicts were finally locked up in their cells. It is feared several convicts escaped. The rising is said to have been instigated by "Chicken" Walsh, one of the most desperate members of the old Albany-street gang.

SHOT IN THE EYE.

A Belleville Man Accidentally Wounded by a Friend.

BELLEVILLE, Aug. 7.—William McCaskey, residing in West Belleville, was accidentally shot in the eye by a companion who was handling a loaded revolver, at Napanee yesterday, about 10 a.m. Two physicians were summoned, who made an unsuccessful attempt to locate the bullet, which had struck the right eye at about the centre and passed almost straight through, striking the bones of the orbit and being reflected downwards and probably buried in the soft tissues of the neck. The patient was conveyed by train to the Belleville Hospital and Dr. Gibson summoned. It was found that the eye was injured beyond repair and its removal was determined on. Drs. Murphy and Clinton and Mr. McCaul were called in to assist and the eye was successfully removed at 8 o'clock last night. The patient is comfortable this morning and it is hoped he may recover, although the exact position of the bullet is not definitely known.

Killed Quicker than Kemmler.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Aug. 7.—The killing by lightning of Ambrose Albee of Whitneyville was one of the most shocking affairs which ever occurred in Maine. During the short but terrific shower at his home Mr. Albee was struck by a bolt on top of the head, which passed through his body and entered the ground. He was instantly killed, a gash three or four inches in length having been made in the top of the head and the flesh burned from the body. His clothing was torn into fragments and his shoes into shreds. There was a hole in the ball of the right foot the size of an ounce bullet, which bled freely; and bruises on his limbs, which resembled those made by small fragments of exploded shell. He had been raking hay in the field, and when the shower struck started on the run for the house, and when within about 200 yards was seen to fall by his wife, who a few moments before had preceded him from the field. He leaves a widow and five small children in destitute circumstances.

Ambitious City Notes.

HAMILTON, Aug. 7.—Fred J. Goff, an engineer on the Grand Trunk Railway, met with a serious accident yesterday morning. While attending to his engine the glass steam gauge burst, pieces of the glass entering and severing the cornea of his left eye. Although suffering intense agony he pluckily stuck to his engine and brought the freight train into the station here on time. The accident happened near Annandale. It is just possible the eye may be saved.

Mrs. Quirk, who resides in Barton-street west, near Locke, was run over in James-street opposite the market square this afternoon. She was not dangerously injured.

Henry Horton, aged 45, while at work yesterday fell against a boiler and broke a rib.

To Expedite the U. S. Tariff Bill.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—At the request of the managers of the Tariff Bill the Republican members of the Senate Committee on Commerce have agreed that consideration of the River and Harbor Bill, which was to have displaced the Tariff Bill to-morrow, will be postponed probably till Friday of next week. It is believed that this change of program will tend to hasten the progress of debate on the Tariff Bill, the Republicans arguing that the Democrats desire action on the River and Harbor Bill earnestly enough to hurry the Tariff Bill out of the way to reach it.

A Canadian Pacific Brakeman Killed.

PRESCOTT, Aug. 7.—A young brakeman named George Yule was killed on the Canadian Pacific Railway about one mile from town at the Grand Trunk Railway crossing. The deceased was on top of the cars walking from the engine, and was struck on the back of the neck by the iron stringer of the bridge. He was carried about 60 yards north of the bridge before he fell off. Death was instantaneous. Yule, whose home was at Gananoque, was about 28 years old and was unmarried.

A Genuine Puritan School.

WINSTED, Conn., Aug. 7.—It is learned that the $500,000 Gilbert Educational Institute, to be established in Winsted under the will of the late William L. Gilbert, is to be of an exclusive character. The will provides that no Roman Catholic shall be educated or employed in the institution and that all persons using liquors, beer or tobacco shall be excluded from its advantages.

The Grenville Canal Defalcation.

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—A. F. Wood, M.L.A., of Madoc, commissioner to investigate the alleged mismanagement in connection with the Grenville canal, arrived from Carillon to-night, having adjourned the investigation sine die for the purpose of obtaining further evidence from outside parties. He is reticent as to the nature of the evidence, but from other sources your correspondent learned that the defalcations of the late superintendent, Forbes, would amount to at least between $35,000 and $60,000, and that they will cover, probably, a period of ten years.

The Trunk Lines' Meeting.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—The joint committee of the trunk lines and the Central Traffic Association, which was convened yesterday, met again to-day and after a session of several hours adjourned to meet in Chicago Aug. 14, when representatives of lake and rail lines are expected to be present. The subject of east-bound freights from Chicago to the seaboard was further discussed and it was determined to retain for the present the new uniform bill of lading.

The Windy City's Pop.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The official rough estimate announced by the census bureau to-day shows the population of Chicago to be 1,098,576. This is an increase during the decade of 596,391. This shows that Chicago has a population of about 58,697 in excess of Philadelphia, and is therefore the second city in population in the United States.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

LORD SALISBURY'S SPEECH AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

The Pacific Aspect of Europe—Growing Tendency to Settle Disputes by Compromise—The Irish and Egyptian Problems—The New Gas Gun Tested.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—At a banquet at the Mansion House last evening Lord Salisbury, in a speech, enlarged upon the pacific aspect of Europe during the six years of his government. The powers of Europe, he said, never presented so uninteresting an aspect from the war point of view. The tendency to the settlement of disputes on terms of compromise was spreading fast and influencing every power. The African agreements proved the desire of the leading powers to maintain amicable relations.

Referring to Egypt, the Premier said that nothing in the course of his administration had been more satisfactory than that country's steady progress towards financial equilibrium. The future of the country was a diplomatic matter of some delicacy. It was owing to English energy that Egypt flourished. The time had not come for Egypt to govern itself. It would depend to a certain degree upon the actions of other nations when Egypt would be fit to be intrusted with its own government.

Regarding home affairs Lord Salisbury claimed that the present government of Ireland had been successful and that the country was more orderly, more contented and more prosperous than ever before. He trusted that he would never again see those in power who were pledged to support a reign of anarchy. [Cheers.]

THE NEW GAS GUN.

A Description of the New French Weapon for Infantry.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—At headquarters of the London Scottish Rifles some interesting experiments have been conducted with M. Paul Giffard's appliance for the employment of liquified gas as an explosive—or, to be more strictly accurate, one should say as a means of propelling projectiles—in place of gunpowder. M. Paul Giffard's scientific reputation as an inventor of the pneumatic tube and of the "Giffard injector," so largely used in connection with steam power, stands so high that any invention to which his name was attached would be worthy of attentive consideration.

The weapon now introduced by him, however, is something more than an ingenious appliance; it is a discovery, which not only promises to revolutionize the gunmaker's art, but is applicable also to many other purposes as a motive power. Those who are interested in the Giffard gun claim that it is the military weapon of the future. The idea of using liquified carbonic acid gas as a propulsive power is not easy, but M. Giffard is the first who has turned it into practical account.

The gas gun is a model of simplicity, so far as one can judge without examination of the discharging mechanism in which much of the merit of M. Giffard's invention lies. A small cylinder, called a cartouche, is attached to the barrel of a rifle or smoothbore gun. This cylinder contains liquified gas enough to discharge 280 shots, equal to about fifty bullets of an ordinary service rifle, with a velocity to kill at 600 yards. There is no other explosive. The pellet is simply dropped into an aperture of the barrel, which is hermetically closed by pressing a small lever, and the loading is complete.

When the trigger is pressed a small quantity of liquified gas becomes released and expands in the breech chamber. There is no louder report than the drawing of a champagne cork makes; no smoke and no fouling of the barrel. In all these respects M. Giffard's gas gun seems to fulfil the requirements of an ideal weapon for warfare, but whether in other respects liquefied gas has advantages over ordinary explosives for military purposes remains to be proved. The inventor says there would be no difficulty in refilling the cylinders with gas on the battlefield, but it is obvious, even if that be the case, that reserve cylinders would have to be supplied to each man in order to make up the number of rounds now thought to be necessary, and, as bullets would of necessity be carried in addition, the ammunition for a gas gun would weigh just as much as ordinary cartridges, weight for weight.

The charge of liquid liberated for each round is regulated by a milled screw, and each charge, as liberated, is contained in a special chamber, from which it is released by the pulling of a trigger. The bullet is dropped separately into an orifice in the breech-lock. In the rifles shown the bullets were round, but elongated bullets can be used. When the guns were discharged a rush of vapor was seen issuing from the muzzles. But it instantly faded away, and the bullets flew with strict precision to the targets. Barrels which had been repeatedly discharged in the past two months were shown to have suffered no corrosion. The pressure of the gas and fluid in the above magazines was 300 lbs. on the square inch, and this pressure is maintained up to the last drop of fluid. The preparation of the liquified gas involves no mechanical power; but the needful pressure is got entirely by the chemical manipulation of ordinary substances, such as carbonate of soda.

THE DISTRIBUTION OF SEATS.

In England it was once proposed by Mr. [illegible], a Tory writer of note, that a commission of judges should be appointed to redistribute the constituencies. To the objection that this might bring the bench into politics, he replied that the same point was raised when the judges were empowered to try election petitions, but that no harm had resulted from their discharging that function.—Toronto Globe.

How gingerly the Globe mentions this proposal of the Tory writer of note! It does not say whether it favors such a plan or not, and says not a word to urge its adoption in Ontario or in the Dominion. If Mr. Mowat were not in office in Ontario no doubt the Liberal organ would cry out for this plan of redistribution, but the gerrymander has been one of the Mowat Government's political weapons and it needs all the aids it has, even though they are grossly unfair and wrong. The handing over of this work to a commission of judges would do the Conservative party in the Dominion little or no harm, but a fair redistribution of the Provincial constituencies would be injurious to the Provincial Government, though not to the people of the Province. This scheme has been mooted in Canada before, by the Hamilton Spectator, which advocated its adoption. No party or government should wish to obtain an advantage through such means as an unfair distribution of the constituencies or a gerrymander, and where only a fair and honest expression of opinion and a proper representation of the people is desired the commission plan could do no harm and would remove all suspicion of unfairness, except with extreme partisans of the stripe of those who attack county judges over the revision of the Dominion voters' lists, and such extremists do not count. Having got up courage to mention the matter the Globe should go a little further and use its influence with Mr. Mowat to give up his gerrymandered constituencies.

There are, however, other means used by the Ontario Government to maintain itself in office that are calculated to suppress the will of the people. The unfair ballot system with its means of tracing votes, the partisan control of the liquor traffic, the bribery by colonization road appropriations, the use of offices to influence voters and all such unjust means of serving party ends Mr. Mowat should discard with the gerrymander. But he is not likely to drop any of them.

THE REPUBLIC'S WAR BURDENS.

CANADIANS have frequently had their attention called to the United States, by opponents of the Dominion Government, as a country that is lessening its debt and the interest that it has to pay, and they have been told that the time is coming when the interest charge will be less than in Canada. The result of this, these prophets have said, would be that in the United States taxes would be less and immigration would no longer be for the Dominion with such a competitor as the Republic would then be. There is one great difference, however, in the character of the debt of the United States and that of Canada. In this country the money has been expended in beneficial public works and in developing the country, while across the lines it was incurred through a war within the country. The expenditure in the States did injury only, while in Canada it was and is beneficial and the advantages of the expenditure will be reaped for ages to come. But there is another point in connection with the question. The debt was not the only burden on that country that the war entailed. The war had not closed when a large pension list was a charge upon the government. In 1864 the expenditure for pensions amounted to $4,500,000, and in 1890 it had risen to nearly $90,000,000. The appropriations this year amount to nearly $98,500,000, and it is estimated that under the Dependent Pensions bill just passed it will be increased by $30,000,000 at least, or to the enormous sum of $123,500,000. This yearly charge would amount to more than half of our whole public debt. So that while the United States has paid off some of its war debt, it has increased the annual charges on account of the war in another direction. This is conveniently lost sight of sometimes.

ELECTROCUTION.

IT is a cause for regret that the execution by electricity of the murderer Kemmler was not such as to lead to a final decision as to the advantages of this mode of execution over hanging. Any method of executing criminals is bad enough, not so much because the criminal himself is to be pitied, but because the taking of the life of a man or woman is repellant. It has been felt strongly, however, that it is necessary to retain capital punishment as a penalty for the capital crime of murder, and the method that would be the least shocking to the moral sense of the community and at the same time a sufficient deterrent of crime should be the one adopted. It was in response to a feeling that hanging was a barbarous method of execution that the State of New York decided to adopt electricity. A great deal of interest was taken in this execution, as it was looked upon as an experiment that would determine the practicability of the method, but when it took place it was accompanied by a mistake and bungling and with a disagreement among the doctors. However, it does seem, judging from the extended reports given of the execution, that it was not attended by the pain and horror that some predicted, though it was horrible enough, as all executions must be.

MARRIAGE IN ENGLAND.

MRS. ASHTON DILKE'S SISTER ON HOW ENGLISH GIRLS MARRY.

The Love Matches of Queen Victoria and the Duchess of Fife—Ample Opportunities for Preliminary Flirtations—Courtships and Marriage the Same as the Canadian.

So much has been written lately on the great marriage question that it becomes a matter of some difficulty to speak on the subject of how our English girls marry without running the risk of being painfully trite. The gradual emancipation of women, and the increased freedom which girls in good society almost invariably enjoy, are the most hopeful signs of the formation of a sound marriage basis. There is no fateful necessity for marrying in haste and repenting at leisure. English girls, as a rule, have ample opportunities for preliminary flirtation, or even for more serious study of character, while dancing, riding, rowing, playing tennis, and what not. London drawing rooms are not, I admit, the invariable home of serious conversation, but with a little tact it is wonderful the quiet tete-a-tete that may be secured even in the most crowded salons. And girls, as a rule, take full advantages of their privileges and whirl gaily through several seasons, looking out tentatively all the while for the advent of that personal mortal who is to inspire the "grande passion" of their lives. In anticipation of course he is always a millionaire, bearing offerings of diamonds in his hand, but when he comes in the shape of a young and briefless barrister, or a handsome but impecunious captain, the passion he inspires is none the less genuine, and in nine cases out of ten parents are cajoled into recognizing the claims of the detrimental, and after an interval of courtship the young couple settle down prosaically and contentedly to a modified form of love in a cottage.

It is generally admitted that the sketches of French social life, as supplied in the novels of Daudet or of Paul Bourget, are drawn in reality from a very restricted portion of Paris society. The English novelist, on the other hand, forms his method on that of the French masters, draws his inspirations from the life of the whole nation, and the healthy, robust love making which is a distinguishing feature of nineteenth century fiction may be accepted as a truthful picture of the domestic drama as it is enacted in many an English home to-day. Anthony Trollope, for instance, always strikes me as a wonderfully faithful exponent of the loves and misfortunes of refined, middle-class nature, and in Trollope's novels nearly all the marriages are love-matches, and where they are not they turn out to be failures. And the sympathies of the reader, like the sympathies of the English public in real life, are always with true hearted and trusting lovers.

We have no lack in England—by way of example—of love-marriages in the highest ranks of life, where the temptations to the "marriages de convenances" are even greater than elsewhere. That Queen Victoria herself married for love is an established historical fact, and most of her daughters are supposed to have followed her example. But we need go no further back than last season, when the marriage of Princess Louise of Wales to the Duke of Fife was celebrated. It is an open secret that the young Princess had been in love with the Earl for years, and for his sake had declined to entertain the proposals of any foreign royal suitor and although in this case the pretensions of the detrimental were backed by a ducal coronet and $250,000 a year, he was none the less a detriment in the eyes of several members of the royal family who steadily opposed the match. But the whole sympathies of the nation were on the side of the future Princess Royal, who has willingly sacrificed a great part of her royal honors for the sake of the man she loves, or who may now be seen shopping in Bond street unattended, or driving with her husband in happy tete-a-tete, much like any other young lady of her age.

Of course there is another side to the question which can not for a moment be ignored. We have had recently pictures enough and to spare of what it is customary to speak of as "the marriage market" of the worldly, wealth-seeking mother trotting out her young and ignorant daughter before a crowd of possible suitors, ready to knock her down to the highest bidder among them. More than that. We can point to marriages among our own circle of friends in which the bride's feelings were not only ignored, but trampled upon, and which were as much dictated by mercenary motives as any marriage solemnized in France. Our own divorce court scandals give eloquent testimony to the truth of these facts. But I honestly believe that such marriages though unhappily frequent in the worldly and pleasure-seeking circles of London society, are after all the exception and not the rule, and there is no doubt that they are strongly condemned by the whole moral sense of the Nation.

The English law, unlike that of France, is not framed in such a way as to encourage mercenary unions. Parental consent with us is not a sine qua non, and although an irate father may disinherit his son or daughter, he can not legally prevent them from marrying whom they please. Even in cases where, one or other of the contracting parties being under age, they have recourse to a runaway marriage at a registrar's office and make a false declaration of age in order to obviate the necessity of producing the father's consent even then the parents' redress is but a meagre one. They can have their rebellious son or daughter condemned to a short term of imprisonment for false swearing, but in no case can the marriage be annulled. On the other hand, a class of titled aristocracy, backed up by the rights of primogeniture is undoubtedly a direct incentive towards worldly marriages, by creating a limited number of exceptionally good "partis," for whom ambitious mammas angle dexterously on behalf of their daughters—or, worse still, for whom scheming damsels angle for themselves.

In England a man almost invariably asks the girl herself to marry him before speaking to her father for his consent. When once the engagement is an accomplished fact the lovers are allowed ample opportunities for making further acquaintance. The whole family cooperate in giving them a wide berth, and they may spend hours every day alone in each other's company in the house or walking or riding together, as the case may be. Such liberty, which would make a French mother's hair stand on end, is perfectly comme-il-faut in England. The young couple even travel and pay visits in each other's company, the fiancee accompanied by her maid, if she should happen to be possessed of that appendage, but oftener still quite without a chaperone.

This freedom of social intercourse ought to be a good safeguard against girls linking their fortunes with one who it is impossible for them to love, were it not that to throw over the man she is engaged to is regarded by society as so unpardonable a crime. It seems to be only just dawning on people's minds that a small scandal before marriage is preferable to a big scandal after marriage. A charming novelist, Sir Henry Cunningham, whose delightful sketches of life in India are widely read, has just published a clever novel about London society, "The Heriots," in which he makes the heroine, Olivia, deliberately jilt the rich young man to whom she is betrothed. His view is that society ought to help the girl out of the wretched dilemma in which she is placed, when she discovers that her engagement is a mistake, instead of rendering it, as at present, almost impossible to retrieve a false step before it is too late. I am bound to say that, while strongly deprecating rash and hasty betrothals, I feel great sympathy for Sir Henry's view, which, if generally adopted, might be the means of averting many a domestic tragedy. The time of engagement ought to be a period of mutual probation, and marriage should only ensue if the experiment has been so far satisfactory to both parties.

Another point in recent social development which bears favorably on the marriage question in England is the rapid breaking down of class distinctions, and the consequent extension of the field of possible matrimonial choice. The aristocracy and the county families intermarry freely nowadays with the professional and upper middle classes. Thus, only a few weeks ago, the eldest daughter of the Earl of Carlisle, Lady Mary Howard, bestowed her hand and heart on Professor Murray, the clever young Greek professor at Glasgow University. Such a union some twenty or thirty years ago would have been regarded as a positive mesalliance, but nowadays it is very sensibly accepted as a perfectly suitable matrimonial arrangement.

Some discussion has recently taken place as to the proper age at which girls should marry; one of the weekly journals requested its readers to state what in their opinion was the best marrying age, and of all the answers received, the vast majority fixed on 25 as the most suitable age, while none [illegible] a figure lower than 21. It is quite the exception for girls in good society to marry before they are 19 (although the Marchioness of Stafford and future Duchess of Sutherland entered into the bonds of wedlock on her 17th birthday, and many parents object to their daughters marrying till they are over 20.—VIRGINIA M. CRAWFORD.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

By Mrs. Bowser.

The other morning we got a telegram from mother, saying she was ill, and asking me to come out for a day or two, and when Mr. Bowser had read it he said:

"You can go just as well as not, and you needn't hurry back on my account."

"But the cook left yesterday, and how will you get along?" I asked.

"Oh, you never mind me. I can sleep here nights and lunch down town. You needn't worry about me. Just take the baby and go and see your mother and stay as long as you wish."

"And you—you——"

"I shan't elope or get drunk."

"But you won't try to make any changes in the house while I'm gone?"

"Changes! Do you suppose I'm going to put on new doors and chimneys?"

"Well, please don't buy any new furniture or carpets, or move things around."

"Don't you worry about my buying anything more this spring. Hurry up, now, and I'll telephone for a coupe. I may lock up the house at noon and go up to the club house for a couple of days. I feel the need of a little rest."

Mr. Bowser caught at my going so eagerly that I half suspected him of some design, and the more I thought it over after getting away the more I was convinced that there was something in the wind. On the morning of the third day I telegraphed him that I was coming home, and when the train got in he was at the depot to meet me. His face fairly beamed with happiness, and as he beckoned to a carriage he said:

"Here's the keys, as I can't be up for a couple of hours yet. I suppose it will take you a couple of hours to clean up the mess I have made."

I had a presentiment and it was verified before I got into the house. Glancing at the front windows I saw that my lace curtains had a queer, strange look, and I rushed in to find that they had been washed. They had been taken down, washed with bar soap, laid out on the grass to dry, and then ironed like a sheet. Any housewife can imagine the result. They showed soap stains in a dozen places, and hung as limp and lifeless as the tail of a kite on a telegraph wire. I sat down on the floor and had a good cry, and then started out to see what else had happened. There was a queer, oppressive odor in the room, and it did not take me long to discover that some one had varnished the furniture—gone over the natural oil finish with a coat of furniture varnish and left bristles from the brush at every foot. It could have been no one but Bowser. His work was further identified by six queer-looking spots on the velvet carpet. He had spilled varnish and then tried to scrub it out with soap, and in each instance he had run the colors sufficient to make a blotch.

After sweeping some more I went into the sitting room. There was the same smell here, and I soon found by the bristles sticking up all over it that Mr. Bowser had varnished the sewing machine. He had likewise repainted the radiator, making it a dark blue, and in decorating it with white and red stripes, his paint had crawled around like so many fishworms. Baby at once wanted to tie a string to it and play horse. Mr. Bowser had upset the varnish pail in this room, and although he had tried soap and water a great spot three feet square remained as a sad witness of his carelessness. While I stood looking I heard a step behind me, and Mr. Bowser called out:

"Surprise! Surprise! I knew I'd surprise you!"

"Yes, you have," I answered.

"Why, w-what's the matter?"

"If you had only let things alone!"

"Let things alone! This house needed slicking up, and I've nearly broken my back in putting things in tidy shape, and now you complain of it!"

I saw the silver water pitcher at that moment and uttered a howl.

"What is it?"

"That pitcher!"

"Yes, I know. It hadn't been cleaned in a month."

"But you used sand-paper on it!"

"Of course, and you ought to have seen the way the dirt peeled off! Anything else to find fault with?"

"And you—you sandpapered all the silver!" I shouted as I looked into the dining-room and saw everything on the table.

"Yes. What have you got your voice way up in 'G' for?"

"You've ruined it! See the scratches!"

"That's it—take on and find fault! No one ever does anything right but you!"

"And what ails the glass over the mantel?"

"It happens to be clean for once. I worked at it all of an hour."

"But you sandpapered it!"

"No, I didn't! I used powdered brick. I don't know how the scratches came there, unless the cat did it."

"And these curtains, too!"

"What are you crying about now! I got a colored woman to come and wash them, and I know she put 'em through three tubs and then laid 'em on the grass to dry. I pinned and hung 'em up myself."

"And they are ruined!"

"Ruined your grandfather. Perhaps I didn't pick all the grass off of them, but I'll leave it to any artist in town if they don't hang perfect. This is all the reward I get for my hard work!"

I entered the kitchen to find that he had sandpapered the bottoms of the flat-irons, scratched every tin dish in a hundred directions and giving the rolling-pin two coats of oil to prevent checking. In trying to dress up the hardwood floor he had thinned down some raw oil with kerosene, and the beauty of the finish was eclipsed only by the smell.

"You—didn't touch anything up stairs!" I gasped.

"Why not? I varnished all the bureaus, bedsteads and stands, cleaned every glass, turned our bed around, painted the radiator in the hall a beautiful drab and——. What are you howling about!"

"Oh, Mr. Bowser, how could you go and destroy our things in this way."

"Destroy! Destroy!"

"The house might as well have been burned down!"

"And I wish it had! The last thing you said when you went away was for me to go ahead and slick up, and now the first thing you do is to find fault. Mrs. Bowser, we are not mated. No man on earth can understand your erratic temperament. This is the last straw—the very last. To-morrow morning we will settle property matters!"

But next day came to find Mr. Bowser's composure fully restored, and when he came home and found a furniture wagon loaded with bedsteads and bureaus, going off to be scraped and redressed, he went in by the alley gate and spent half an hour in the barn so as not to see anything.

After considerable discussion the matter was again referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee to consult with the Light and Power company. The fire by-law was approved of and recommended to the Council for adoption. The Finance Committee also considered a number of accounts. The Council will meet in regular session on Monday evening.

Norwood Wheel Factory.

The Norwood Register says:—"Messrs. Finlay & Son made a good move when they established the wheel factory here. With their present first class facilities they have order work sufficient to keep the factory going for the next seven months. An addition, we understand, will be erected at once and a larger force of men engaged. 'More power to your elbow, John.'"

The Hamilton Band.

The International Royal Templar says that the 13th Battalion band of Hamilton, which is an excellent organization, will stop at the Peterborough C.P.R. station on Wednesday evening next on their way to Montreal and give a short concert. It is regrettable that the train passes through here at so late an hour, about 11.20, as no doubt many would be pleased to have an opportunity to here this band.

Blocking the Sidewalk.

For some hours Thursday part of the sidewalk on George-st., between Simcoe and Charlotte, was blocked by the extensive stock of ale being brought in by W. J. Morrow. Several complaints were made but Mr. Morrow after securing a large staff had it removed. The stock consists principally of the celebrated White Label, and the number of cars that have come to his address these few months past speaks volumes for the ale. d27w31

Koh-i-nur! Koh-i-nur!

Every brand of tea has its own peculiarities. So to get a perfect Tea, you can only do so by blending these different kinds in proportion, that by so doing the one flavor benefits the other. This being the case, how is it possible to obtain such perfection? Only by a long practical experience and having at your disposal large quantities of the several Brands to operate with. Such are the conditions by which the Tea is introduced for the first time to the Canadian public under the name and brand of KOH-I-NUR. This Tea has been carefully blended by those who have been engaged, and have had a life's experience, in the trade. For sale at Hawley Bros. tea store. d18w3

Hurrah for Norwood.

The excursion of True Blues to Norwood on Tuesday, 12th inst., bids fair to be one of the most delightful of the season. In addition to the Peterborough True Blues, two lodges of that order from pontypool and one from Janetville are certain to go; Nassau, Lakefield, Smith, Peterborough 49 and 50 L. O. Lodges will take part in the demonstration and there is reason to believe that others will join. Addresses will be delivered by G. N. Newman, True Blues, and Grand Sec. Ingram, Clark, Wallace, of Toronto, G. M. of Orangemen, B. N. A., also E. F. Clark, Mayor of Toronto. This event will be one of stirring interest to the Order and it is to be hoped that there will be a large attendance. The train leaves Peterborough at 9.30 a. m. and returning leaves Norwood at 6 30 p. m. 1w32-2d35

Organ Recital.

There was a very good attendance at the organ recital given in St. John's church last evening by Dr. Davies, showing that the interest in these recitals is well sustained. The second number, "Brautgesang," Opus 45, by Adolf Jensen, was a graceful melody and was probably the piece of the evening. The fastasie, "Chœur Seraphique," by Guilmant, was a very striking composition of the modern school, giving the effect of a hidden choir. Kozeluch's graceful little gavotte in F. came in as fresh as ever, old as it is. Perhaps the most brilliant piece on the programme was the overture "La Gazza Ladra," by Rossini. The effects of the orchestration on so moderate a sized instrument was surprising. These recitals will be continued fortnightly through the season, on Thursday evenings. The programme last night was as follows:—

1. Allegretto, Military Symphony	Haydn
2. Brautgesang, Opus 45	Adolf Jensen
3. Aria, Sonata in F	Domenico Paradies
4. Fantasie, Chœur Seraphique	Alexandre Guilmant
5. Gavotte in F	Leopold Kozeluch
6. Marcia Funebre	Frederic Chopin
7. The Organ Song, "St. Cecilia"	Handel
8. Overture, "La Gazza Ladra"	Rossini
9. Marche Militaire	Lefebvre Wely

Improvements at Auburn.

The practice has gained ground in American centres of manufacture where the premises are well situated to enclose the grounds in use and to bestow some measure of care on their ornamentation. Of course there are many industries where this plan cannot be carried out, but where at all practicable it is largely adopted. In Canada the idea is meeting favor and one of the pioneers in this respect is the Auburn Woollen Company of Peterborough. As is well known their large mills and premises adjoining occupy several acres of land on the river bank, exclusive of additional property separated from the buildings by the railroad. Recently the manager, Mr. Jas. Kendry, has had completed improvements which have been for some time under way and which very materially enhance the business like and prosperous appearance of the property and premises. A large portion of the ground, including the mills, has been surrounded by a high and substantial picket fence, replacing the old one which had served its purpose. Opposite the mill entrance the fence has been built so as to leave a large bay and the approach has been graded. The gate posts and large gate are well designed, cleverly put up and offer a good model for others to copy. As a novelty the posts are turned, and considering that they are about 18 inches in diameter and 12 feet above ground, the job has been well executed. The gate is substantial and ornamental as well, the whole being painted a dark green with Pompean red trimmings. Over the gate is the lettering "Auburn Woollen Mills." The gate and fixtures were turned out of the shop of Mr. J. Donell, Dickson race, and reflect credit on the builder. The business office is outside the bay and easily approached by vehicles. The large space in front of the mills shows a capital and well trimmed piece of turf, and several beds of flowers and foliage plants make a grateful spot for the eye to rest on. Altogether the improvement is such as to impress the passer by with the responsibility of the company and the well ordered state of affairs prevailing in and about the premises, and which is largely due to the thoroughness and ability of the manager.

They Visited Lindsay.

The Madoc correspondent of the Intelligencer says:—"The worst circus gang that ever visited Madoc was here last Thursday. It is earnestly hoped it will be the last. The man with the nut shells and little balls reaped a rich harvest. It was surprising to see the number of people ready to throw away their money, some losing as high as $100. As they were ready to start, some of the beats had their goods seized. After considerable wrangling, they paid the claim and departed for Lindsay." The Lindsay Warder speaks of the crowd in about the same strain.

Attempted Train Wrecking.

Last Saturday morning says the Register, a dastardly attempt at train wrecking was perpetrated on the C.P.R., about three miles west of Norwood. A large piece of timber was laid across the rails evidently with the intention of wrecking either of the early morning west-bound expresses. Very fortunately, however, a freight train encountered the obstacle first and succeeded, without damage, in throwing it from the track. The size of the obstruction just brought it within reach of the cow-catcher, hence the train's escape from derailment.

A Painful Accident.

Last evening Mr. Richard Mowry, of Ashburnham, met with a painful accident while breaking a large limb off a tree in front of his place. The limb had been broken by the wind and was hanging by a small piece. It was a menace to those who walked under it and with the aid of a young man named Johnston Mr. Mowry broke it off. As the limb gave way it struck Mr. Mowry on the arm and a silver penetrated his arm just above the elbow joint, inflicting a severe wound. The arm became swollen to the shoulder and a physician who was called had to put several stitches in the wound. There were other bruises, also, on his arm made by the falling limb. The young man Johnston was also struck, but fortunately was not injured.

A Wedding in Millbrook.

The Reporter says:—"An event of pleasing importance to the friends of the prime parties took place on the evening of Wednesday, July 30th, at the residence of Mr. James Evans, when he gave away his daughter Alice in wedlock to Mr. P. E. Metheral, of Garden Hill. Mr. Fred Metheral, of Peterborough, cousin of the groom, performed the difficult part of 'best man,' while Miss Annie Peters, also of Peterborough, rendered similar service for the bride. Over 50 guests sat down to supper and everything went along cheerily. The Fire Brigade band serenaded the company at the house, and after supper escorted the party to the G.T. R. station, where the happy couple took the 9 30 train for their future home. The presents were numerous and valuable. The groom presented the bride with a handsome family Bible as the foundation of their new home. They left our village amid showers of rice and the best wishes of all who knew them for their future happiness."

Lacrosse.

The Toronto Empire, of Tuesday, contains the following:—"In the Eastern district the fine team of the Checkers, of Beaverton, has not been called upon to defend their right to hold the championship. Lacrosse must not be allowed to lie dormant in such places as Peterborough, Madoc and Norwood." To which the Register replies:—"The executive of the C. L. A. have themselves to blame for the lack of enthusiasm manifested in the Eastern District. Beaverton should never have been included in the Eastern District—its proper place being in the North-eastern District. Beaverton, if we know anything of the geography of this province, is about as near the centre of the North-eastern District as possible, and why it should have been tacked on to the Eastern District—over one hundred miles east—is inexplainable. Bar Beaverton, we have not one word to say against the arrangement of the Eastern District—Port Hope, Peterborough, Norwood, Madoc and Belleville were all within very short distances of each other and series of matches could have been carried on without any severe financial strain being felt by any of the clubs comprising it. Had the executive of the C.L.A. for 1889 considered this matter from a financial standpoint and arranged the district accordingly, lacrosse, in this section, would have been alive and booming to-day."

Canadian Shipping.

A list of shipping, issued in the shape of a blue book, under authority of Mr. Tupper, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has been published. The total number of vessels remaining on the register books of the Dominion on the 31st of December, 1889, including old and new vessels, sailing vessels, steamers and barges, was 7,153, measuring 1,040,481 tons registered tonnage, being an increase of 11 vessels and a decrease of 40,161 tons registered. As compared with 1888 the number of steamers on the registry book on the same date was 1,348, with a gross tonnage of 205,632 tons. Assuming the average value to be $30 per ton, the value of the registered tonnage of Canada on the 31st of December last would be $31,213,430 The number of new vessels built and registed in the Dominion during last year was 280, measuring 34 246 tons registered tonnage. Estimating the value of the new tonnage at $45 per ton it gives a total value of $1,543,670 for new vessels. The total number of ships and steamers gives in the Province of Quebec were 1,455, with a tonnage of 168,500. The number at Montreal were 489, with a tonnage of 79,206, and the number at Quebec was 875, with a tonnage of 84.532.

Measuring a Train's Speed.

An ingenious contrivances for indicating the speed of railway trains is a French invention. The apparatus consists of simply putting in a play cord giving a normal musical note. Connected with this is an arm carrying a stylus which marks its vibrations upon a piece of paper covering a cylinder which turns by its own weight. All this mechanism is in a small box, which can easily be placed among the ballast between the sleepers, and which begins to register the moment a train reaches it and begins to pass over it. Additional features consist of tubes secured to three wooden pedals is placed along the outside of one of the rails. When the wheel passes the pedal a little cork button placed in a hole in the pedal is forced down, and the air which is compressed raises a valve and sets a spring vibrating. The wheel acts similarly upon the other pedals, and the result is that three marks are made upon the cylinder, which indicate the beginning, the middle, and the end of the operation. The three pedals are two metres apart, so that there is a space of six metres covered by the system. The speed of the train is then determined by the the number of vibrations indicated, which, through the known number of vibrations per second given by the musical note, can be readily ascertained, as the more rapidly the train runs over the distance between the pedals the smaller will be the number of vibrations traced on the cylinder. Convenient tables are prepared showing to the practical observer the exact relation the readings have to the speed.

Adventures on the Plains.

Early in March, 1867, a party of friends, all old buffalo-hunters, now living and prominent citizens of Wichita and Great Bend, in Kansas, were camped in Paradise Valley, then a famous rendezvous of the animals they were after. One day when out on the range stalking, and widely separated from each other, an awful blizzard came up. Three reached camp without much difficulty, but he who was the furthest away was fairly caught in it, and night coming on, was compelled to resort to a method frequently employed by persons lost on the plains. Luckily he soon found a superannuated bull that had been abandoned by the herd, and killing him, took out the viscera, and himself crawled inside the huge beast, where he lay until morning, the storm having cleared off, and the sun shining brightly. But when he attempted to get out, found himself a prisoner, the immense ribs of the creature having frozen together, and locked him up as tightly as if he were in a cell. Fortunately his friends, who were searching for him and firing off their rifles—which he heard, and yelled out to them—discovered and released him from his peculiar predicament.

At another time two old plainsmen were away up the Platte among the foot hills hunting buffalo, and they, as is generally the case, became separated. In an hour or two one killed a fat young cow, and, leaving his rifle on the ground, went up and commenced to skin her. While busily engaged in the work, he suddenly heard, right behind him, a suppressed sort of a snort, and looking around, saw to his dismay a monstrous grizzly, ambling along in that animal's characteristic manner, within a few feet of him.

In front, only a few rods away, there happened to be a clump of scrubby pines, and he incontinently made a break for them, climbing into the tallest in less time than it requires to write of it. The bear deliberately ate a hearty meal off the cow, and when he had satiated himself, quietly lay down alongside of the carcass and went to sleep, keeping one eye probably on the hunter corralled in the tree. In the early evening his partner came to the spot, killed the bear, which, full of buffalo, was sluggish and unwary, and became an easy victim, and the unwilling prisoner came down from his perch. The last time I saw him he told me he still had the bear's hide, which he kept as a memento of his foolishness in separating himself from his rifle, a thing he had never done before nor since, and which no hunter should be guilty of.—Henry Inman, in Harper's Weekly.

DECLINE OF COURTESY.

The Civilities of Men and the Alleged Ingratitude of Women.

I don't know how other people feel about it," said the senior of a group, a man about fifty years old, of dignified appearance and courtly in demeanor, to a New York Tribune reporter, "but I find that when I am tempted to keep my seat and to see a woman stand I am ashamed of myself. Something makes me feel cheap so that I haven't the courage to look her or any one else in the eyes. For my own peace of mind, therefore, I give up my seat and stand, however tired I am. I must say that I have seldom met women who failed to recognize this little compliment to their sex by some sign of appreciation—a pleasant nod, a graceful smile or a quiet and conventional 'thank you.' Perhaps this is because I am getting old, but that is neither here nor there.

"I can say, though, with perfect truth that I have had one experience with a well intended act of courtesy not only did not elicit any word of thanks but, on the contrary, caused the woman evident annoyance. And I could hardly blame her, although I was terribly embarrassed by her curt manner.

"I was in Boston at the time (don't smile, you self-satisfied New Yorkers), and went to the Boston Museum to get seats for one of Booth's performances. There was a long line before the box office when I took my place at the end. The one in line before me was a woman, handsomely but quietly dressed. The people moved so slowly and the wait was so wearisome that we kept no direct line, but were turned, some one way some another In this way I could not fail to notice the woman's wonderful complexion. It was dazzling in its delicate tints of rose and white and one could, almost see the roses in her cheek fade and blush by turns. I am afraid that I found her complexion so perfect that I was impolite enough to stare at her when I thought she was not looking my way, for she turned her head and after that I could only see the pink and white of two delicately fashioned ears.

"When she reached the box office and selected her seats and was opening her pocketbook to pay for them a small package slipped from her hands. I saw it and grabbed at it to catch it before it struck the marble of the floor. Of course I missed it, and as it fell I heard a slight crash of glass. Picking it up hurridly, I offered it to her, but she crisply declined to touch it, saying: "Please let it lie on the floor."

"I stood there rather sheepishly, holding it, when I felt a cold creamlike mixture steal between my fingers. Looking at the package I saw, to my horror, that the wrapper had been torn enough to show on the bottle's side just two words 'Face Enamel.' The woman had started for the stairs with a crimson hue in her cheeks that no enamel, no paint, not even the most highly colored brush of nature could equal. As for me, I dropped the bottle with a crash and fled like a coward, not waiting for any ticket. As I made my escape I heard several snickers. They were all women's."

Early Childhood.

I had a lace cap and I perfectly remember that I frequently wore this when taken downstairs to see company; and there is not much in this recollection, for I have often been told that my mother let me wear it much later than most children, for I had not much hair, and she thought it becoming, writes Jean Ingelow in Longman's Magazine. There were little bows of satin ribbon in it, and I wore it till about three years old.

After this my recollection grows more distinct. I begin to understand a good deal of what people said—that is, of what they said especially to me—and nearly the last of the remembrances, which I have called visions, belong to the summer when I was about two years and four months old.

I was in a honeysuckle arbor in the garden, sitting on my mother's knee. She had a white gown on and her pearl necklace, I saw two stars—planets, probably,—and I suppose I pointed at them and asked her to give one of them to me. I think that is what I said, but do not in the least remember any words, and the knowedge was conveyed I have not the least idea; but I was let to know by my mother that the stars were not hers—that there was some one there to whom they belonged and who made them. He was very good and if we were good he would be pleased with us.

I did not like this at all. Something like awe, I suppose, made me hide my face in her bosom, lest he should see me, and for some time after this, when we went out walking and there were great white clouds in the sky, I used to look out, in case he might be seen sitting on one of them.

The total want of any knowledge of right and wrong was not altogether wilful then. Certain things were only found out to be delinquencies when punishment followed the doing of them. I remember seeing the dear mamma and a young friend of hers ornamenting some saucers and little vases with tiny flowers made of various colored rice paper. The flowers were cut out leaf by leaf, fastened together with gum and then stuck on to the vases, which was made of what is called biscuit china. I used to watch the making of these. They were finished and put on a table in the drawing-room. I saw them. It was a long sofa table of rosewood. I managed to stand on a little stool to admire more closly, and then by slow degrees I picked every one of the flowers off with the greatest care and pains, and collected them in a little cup. I had nearly finished this task, so happy I was, so industrious, when my mother and her friend came in. Great were the exclamations! I was a "very, very, naughty mischevious child!" I was scolded and punished, and then found out that I had done wrong.

About this time and for some months—perhaps for more than a year after—I had a habit of attributing intelligence to not only all living creatures—the same amount and kind of intelligence that I had myself—but even to stones and manufactured articles. I used to feel how dull it must be for the pebbles in the causeway to be subjected to lie still and only see what was round about. When I walked out with a little basket for putting flowers in I used sometimes to pick up a pebble or two and carry them on to have a change; then at the further point of the walk turn them out, not doubting that they would be pleased to have a new view.

This difficulty in attaining to a clear distinction in the understanding between dead matter—I will call it the world—and the youthful spirit observing it is very much increased by grown up people. They suggest and foster it. They teach their children to kiss and fondle dolls and to pat the pictures in a book or to slap the "naughty floor" when they tumble down and it has struck them.

PLAYED POLICE.

And Now Has to Answer to a Suit for Damages.

Thomas Crouch and Claude Martin, two well know North Broadway horse dealers and practical jokers, shocked public decency by one of their jokes yesterday, Crouch procured a policeman's outfit, and in this arrayed a brawny employed named McCarthy. They then went to the natatorium at Nineteenth and Pine streets, where a hundred bathers were disporting. Soon a difficulty arose between Crouch and Martin, the bogus officer rushed in, and the scrimmage was knocked over the railing into the twenty feet of water. Coming to the surface he drew his revolver and with seeming recklessness discharged every chamber, causing a terrible fright among the bathers, who in various stages of undress, and some perfectly nude, ran panic-stricken from the building through the streets, to the dismay of pedestrians and residents of the locality. One man, carrying no handicap but a towel, was taken into custody as insane by a genuine officer two blocks away. In the excitement the jokers escaped, and for half an hour natatorium attaches were employed carrying clothing to back rooms or drugstores, barber shops, etc., etc., to victims of the joke who would not return in their nakedness. The jokers, are well-to-do business men, are now threatened with damage suits and criminal prosecutions by the proprietors.—St Louis Globe.

KNOW HOW —TO— KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the prob.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"But wherein was it so wondrously peculiar?" asked Ruric, with interest.

"Why—in this: Arsenic was the principal poisoning agent, but that alone would produce symptoms which any physician would know at once. In this case there was something present which overcame all the outward signs of the poison, and only let it eat upon the vitals. I know not the secret, though I know there is such a one. Had it not been for your fortunate suspicions the count would have died from the effects of the wound. The poison was working silently, and surely—without pain, and without outward different from the usual sinking of the worn and fainting body. But I have hopes now. The villain must not know that we have discovered him. We will let the thing run for the present."

Kopani was not a little surprised when he found that the priest had been there during his absence, but before he could make any further remark the count awoke. He felt very faint, but that strange sickness of the stomach was lessened. The surgeon prepared some suitable diluents, and having called in the woman he gave directions that they should be given in large quantities; and also directed her to prepare some strong barley water for the patient to drink as he wanted beverage.

All the phials were replaced upon the sideboard, and then refilled with liquids somewhat like those they had before contained; but the nurse was directed not to use them. Everything that her patient was to take she was to keep under her own charge in the kitchen; and she was also most particularly cautioned against allowing the priest to gain anything from her. But Kopani meant to be sure in that score. He had a little business to transact, and then he was coming back to spend the night himself by the count's side. He meant at all events, that the poisoner should have no more opportunity to exercise his diabolical science upon the sick nobleman. He promised the Count that he should have safe and competent watchers thereafter.

It was fairly dark now, as Ruric could see by raising the curtain and looking out. He had no idea it was late. Time had passed without his notice. He moved to the side of the bed and took the invalid's hand.

"I must go now," he said, "but if you are willing, I will come again—"

"You will come," uttered Conrad, in reply, returning the grasp of the hand with all his feeble power. "Oh, you must come often now. I hope I shall live. Perhaps I shall. If I do, I shall owe my life to you. And God knows—for the feeling is even now firm in my soul—that I will always remember how you saved me—and I will never think, never, of the sad blow you struck me. Come—come to me when you can, for now—now—as God lives I speak the truth—now I love you!"

"God bless and keep you," murmured Ruric, in a husky, tremulous voice; and with these words, coming from the very depths of his soul, he turned away and left the room. He heard the voice of the count as he moved toward the open door, and thanked God 'twas a blessing which fell upon his ears.

Ah, those who know not what true forgiveness is, know not the holiest emotion of earth!

Ruric had left his sledge at a neighboring inn, and as soon as he gained the street he bent his steps that way. He had gone half the distance from the residence of the count to the inn, and was just upon the point of crossing the street, when he heard his name pronounced by some one behind him. He stopped and looked around, and saw a man approaching him.

It was too dark to distinguish faces plainly, even at a usual conversational distance, yet Ruric was not long in concluding that the man who had thus hailed him was a stranger. He was a medium-sized man, and so closely enveloped in his bonnet and pelisse that his form and features would have been hidden even had it been lighter than it was.

"Did you speak to me?" asked the youth as the man came up.

"Yes, sir. Is your name Ruric Nevel?"

"It is."

"Then you are wanted a few moments at the residence of a lieutenant, named Orsa."

"Alaric Orsa?" asked Ruric.

"The same."

"But he does not live here in the Kremlin."

"He is here now, at any rate, and would see you."

"But you said he was at his residence," suggested our hero, who was fearful that some evil might be meant for him."

"I know to the contrary, sir," the stranger returned, promptly. "All I can say is, Alaric Orsa has fallen upon the ice, and hurt himself severely, and upon being informed that you were near by with a sledge, he asked that you might be sent for."

"Been hurt, has he?"

"Yes, sir."

"Badly?"

"I believe no bones are broken, but he is so badly sprained that he cannot walk."

"Ah—then perhaps he wants me to carry him home."

"I can't say as to that, sir. They only sent me to find you. I don't know the man myself."

There was something so frank in the statement thus made that Ruric believed it all honest, and he stood no longer in doubt.

"I will go," he said, "but lead the way quickly, for I have no time to waste."

"I will lead as fast as you will want to follow," answered the man.

And thus speaking he turned back, and having gone some dozen rods by the way they had both come, he turned down a narrow street which led towards the river. Half-way down this he went, and then he turned again—this time to the left—and thus Ruric found himself in a narrow, dark lane, within which the snow was deep and almost untrodden.

"Look ye," cried the youth, stopping as he found himself over knees in snow, "I think we have gone about far enough in this direction."

"This is the shortest way," said the stranger guide, apologetically. "I did not think the snow was so deep here. But it's only in the next street."

"Then on you go."

Again the stranger started, and Ruric followed. The lane was a crooked one, and more than once the youth had another inclination to stop. He had no direct fear, but yet he had some just grounds for doubt. Had he not seen what had been attempted against the count, he might have had no such doubts now; but as it was, he thought that if one attempt had been made to ruin him through the Emperor's displeasure by the man who was now trying to murder the count, it would not be at all improbable that some more effective plan should be adopted towards him. He was pondering thus when they came to a cross lane, full as narrow as this, into which the guide turned.

"Look ye once more, sirrah," cried the youth, now stopping short. "Do you call this a street?"

"Yes, sir; and on this street we shall find the man we seek. It is only a short cut from where he is to the inn where your horse is; so you won't have to retrace these dubious ways. Only a little further, sir."

"But I don't like this."

"Why—bless you sir; if you wish to go direct to the inn where you horse is, this will be the nearest way."

"Well—on you go."

To be continued.

IN TROUBLE WITH THE K. OF L.

The New York Central Railroad Discharges a Number of Men.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—In regard to the discharge of certain workmen by the New York Central Railway which is likely to lead to trouble with the Knights of Labor, Third Vice-President Walter H. Webb of the company said to-day that the discharge of the men was only the result of the curtailing of their force made necessary by the slacking up of traffic which occurs every summer. They were running the road on strictly business principles and did not propose to be dictated to by the men. They know nothing whatever of a probable strike and did not anticipate any trouble.

Master Workman E. T. Lee of the Knights of Labor was seen later and said the road had utterly disregarded the agreement made with the men, no reason being given for the discharge of old and trusted employes. The executive board of the Knights met here this afternoon and some decided course of action will be agreed upon.

THE SAULT CANAL.

Congress Will Spend Over $5,000,000 in Needed Improvements.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—An understanding has been reached regarding the appropriations for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, and all danger to the great waterway from that source has been removed. Speaker Reed remains firm in his intention not to permit the passage of any separate measures for this purpose, but he will offer no objection to the passage of the item inserted by the Senate in the River and Harbor Bill appropriating $1,300,000 for the building of a new lock and the improvement of Long Lake Channel, the appropriation to continue from year to year until $5,400,000 in all has been expended. Of the $1,300,000 provided for the bill $900,000 will be immediately applied to the work on the new lock and the rest to the improvement of the channel.

Clasped by a Severed Hand.

BRAZIL, Aug. 7.—Friday, June 20, Frederick Miller and David Heller, two employes at the furnace at the rolling mills, were killed by a premature explosion of Hercules powder while blasting out salamander from the bottom of the furnace. Miller was standing directly over the drilled hole at the time of the explosion and was terribly torn and disfigured. Both arms were blown off. But one was found. Every effort to find the other arm proved fruitless until yesterday.

The workmen saw an object clinging to one of the stay rods that help to support and keep in position the stacks on the top of the furnace. Through curiosity they climbed up to the top and they saw a sight that not only filled them with horror, but with wonder. There in full sight of all was a man's hand, with only the stub of an arm attached, tightly clasping the rod above mentioned.

There can be no doubt but that the hand is that of the unfortunate Miller. The only theory known for the strange freak of the bodyless hand is that the hand was blown out of the top of the highest stack, and in coming down, the muscles, still active, contracted when the hand struck the rod and fastened to it with a deadly grip. From the position in which Miller was standing the hand could not have reached the position it occupied other than in the above manner. The muscles could not have relaxed much after the first contracting, else the hand would have fallen.

A CYCLONE DOWN EAST.

Thirty-one Buildings Blown Down in Madawaska County, N.B.

ST. LEONARD, N.B., Aug. 7.—A heavy thunder and hail storm, accompanied by a cyclone, did considerable damage in the parish of St. Ann's, Madawaska County, yesterday. The cyclone covered a territory about two miles wide. Thirty-one buildings were blown down as far as heard from. Considerable damage was done to crops.

An Alleged Robbery.

KINGSTON, Aug. 7.—People from Portsmouth reported this morning that a highway robbery had been committed on Sunday evening. A young man and woman, while driving on the road leading past the penitentiary farm, were attacked by masked men. They sprang from the side of the road and stopped the rig. "Seize the horse, Jack, and I will take care of the occupants of the buggy," said one of the men. A man caught the horse by the bridle and his companions jumped into the buggy. They seized the couple and used them roughly while trying to relieve them of their jewelry.

In the struggle to get the girl's watch the robbers broke the chain and the watch slipped down between her clothing. They could not find it. They were more successful with the man and got his watch. The choking which the men gave the girl made her very ill.

When the robbers left the rig they headed for the city. It is said that suspicious looking characters have been seen loitering about the locality.

Dom Pedro's Bon Mot.

A bon mot, to which fate has since added an ironical comment, has been attributed to the ex-Emperor of Brazil. On being shown one of those mechanical wonders which always interested him more than the cares of government, a wheel that made we know not how many revolutions in the minute. "Why," said the monarch, "it actually beats our South American republic."—Spectator.

A Guelph Barn Burnt.

GUELPH, Aug. 7.—Shortly after 12 o'clock to-day the fire alarm was sounded for a fire in No. 5 Ward. On reaching there it was found that a stable belonging to Mr. Levan was in flames. The building, with about one ton of hay, was a total loss. It was insured for $400. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

A GLADSTONIAN RETURNED WITHOUT OPPOSITION.

Mutiny in the Garrison at Chatham—Socialist Fight Near Zurich—Cholera's Ravages at Jeddah—Twenty Persons Drowned in the Pilsen Accident.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The election to fill the vacancy in the House of Commons for the east division of Carmarthenshire caused by the death of David Pugh, Home Ruler, took place Thursday. Thomas, Gladstonian, was returned without opposition.

A portion of the army service corps attached to the garrison at Chatham have mutinied. They alleged their sergeants were imposing vexatious and needless duties upon them without authority from superior officers. The men refused to parade and barricaded themselves in a storehouse. Twenty were arrested and imprisoned.

A fight occurred yesterday between a number of Socialists near Zurich. Several were killed and a number wounded.

There are 170 cases of the worst type of cholera at Jeddah. The authorities have forbidden pilgrims who have been to Mecca to embark at Jeddah.

Twenty of the passengers who were on the train that was thrown down an embankment near Pilsen Wednesday are missing. It is feared they were drowned.

The French and Swiss Anarchists have held a conference at Les Buches in Savoy.

Of late there has been an appalling number of suicides among children in Germany. A large percentage of these self-murders have taken place among school children as the result of over-study, failure to pass examinations and similar causes, and it is suggested that school discipline be relaxed as a means of lessening the suicidal tendency.

Mr. Bowell, editor of The Midland Tribune, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for publishing a boycott resolution.

Emperor William bade the Queen farewell last evening and left for Heligoland amid cheers and a salute.

TORONTO TOPICS.

Trouble in the Council of the Ontario Pharmacy College.

TORONTO, Aug. 9.—There is trouble in the Council of the Ontario Pharmacy College. Chairman Jeffrey of the Education Committee and D. Avignon have resigned, in consequence there being no quorum yesterday an adjournment was made until February, 1891, no action being taken to provide successors for these gentlemen. The difficulty grows out of a demand for Principal Sutherland's resignation in consequence of an article published by him in The Canadian Pharmaceutical Journal. The principal says that the charges against him of being too despotic, appropriating the lion's share of the institution and renting out the balance to inferior talent are false, and that he will enter a libel suit and ventilate the case in the courts.

James Lynch was charged at the Police Court yesterday with selling liquor without a license at Dufferin Park. Two witnesses named William Kent and John Bolley explained the modus operandi. On applying to defendant for a glass of beer he told them he didn't sell beer; but he thereupon gave them two or three matches, saying: "I'll sell you the matches and give you what you want to drink." They both accepted these terms and had two glasses of beer. The police seized the express wagon Lynch had in charge and found three dozen bottles of beer, two quarts of whisky and glasses for drinking purposes. The case was remanded till Tuesday.

About four weeks ago Joseph McCullough, 40 years of age and a painter by trade, left his home, 194 Centre-street, early in the morning and has not returned since. Mrs. McCullough has two small children to support and is naturally very anxious to know what has become of her husband.

The C. P. R. and G. T. R. have proved themselves as good as their word. Yesterday men were placed on guard on the crossings at Brock-avenue, Avenue-road, Bathurst-street and Dufferin-street, and the work of constructing gates will be proceeded with forthwith.

P. C. Dewhurst, who was stabbed by Frank Hooke while attempting to arrest Hooke and his companion, Philip Gates, at McMurrich-street and Dovercourt-road early Friday morning, is resting easily, but his wounds are of a very serious character. In addition to the wound in the neck, which is seven inches in length, Dewhurst received a stab on the arm. Gates was arraigned at the Police Court yesterday morning and remanded for a week. Hooke is still at large. At an early hour yesterday morning he was seen in Dovercourt-road and obtained 10 cents from the engineer at William Forbes' planing mill. The police description of Hooke is as follows: Age 46, height 6 feet, lame, mustache auburn, trade engineer, birth Canadian, descent German.

At the Trinity College examinations the Bishop Strachan Scholarship of $300 went to T. S. Locke, St. Catharines Collegiate Institute. First Dickson Scholarship of $140, A. W. After the boat had cleared from Charlotte Allen took a d se and a short time afterwards was found dead in one of the rooms of the cabin

NOT A WHEEL TURNED.

A BIG STRIKE ON THE NEW YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD.

Trains Stopped at Divisional Terminal After 7 o'Clock Friday Night—The West Shore and New York & New Haven Involved—Left in a Tunnel.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—There is a strike on the New York Central Railway. No trains have left the Grand Central depot at 42nd-street. The depot is crowded with people. It is reported an incoming train was deserted in the tunnel at 26th-street and the passengers were left to make their way to 42nd-street as best they could.

ALBANY, Aug. 9.—The Central-Hudson road is tied up from Buffalo to New York. All switchmen have deserted their posts, trains are allowed to proceed to the terminal of their divisions and then switch service is refused. The strike began at 7 o'clock last night.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—The trouble threatened among the thousands of employes of the New York Central and other Vanderbilt lines owing to the discharge of Knights of Labor and Brotherhood men broke out suddenly shortly after 7 o'clock last night. All the length of the Central was tied up and trains were left by their crews where they stood when the order came. Two passenger trains were left at 86th-street in the tunnel, one going in each direction. The latest report at 9 o'clock last night was that the West Shore Railway was tied up throughout its length, as well as the New York & New Haven Railway. Great throngs of people crowded into the Grand Central depot trying to have tickets changed and asking all manner of questions. No one seems to know who ordered the strike. J. J. Holland, the labor leader, denies that he knew who ordered it or even that it was ordered when seen by a reporter at 8 o'clock. The officers of the Central are said to be closeted in the depot, but nothing definite can be learned.

At 11 o'clock the Grand Central Station was closed. A notice was posted announcing that the sale of tickets had been temporarily discontinued. The general opinion among the men was that the trouble would not have arisen had Mr. Depew been in this country. Their grievances seem to be personally directed against Vice-President Webb and General Manager Toucey.

The Brooklyn Brotherhood Baseball team were unable to get to Boston last night. The indications are that the road will be tied up to-day from New York to Buffalo.

At a late hour C. W. Webb said the men on strike were switchmen. There was no trouble with the engineers and firemen. He intended to put on new men and would surely have trains running this morning. At 11½ o'clock J. J. Holland of the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor stated that he had not ordered the strike, but thought that the head of the local division of the Knights of Labor might have done so. Several strikers said last night this would prove to be the biggest strike the people in the east had seen for some time.

Vice-President Webb was finally found and interviewed. He said the strike extended only to West Albany. About 800 men were out. All men who went out from the employ of the road last evening would be promptly discharged this morning. Those who remained true to the company would be well taken care of and amply protected, as well as all men who came to work for the road. The roads would take on all good men who applied for work in the morning as far as they were needed. With great emphasis Mr. Webb announced that he would fight the strikers to the bitter end. He said the new set of demands published yesterday he had not seen and knew nothing about. He announced that the fast mail had pulled out of the depot at 9 o'clock last night with four mail cars, but no passenger cars were attached to the train. He stated that no attempt would be made to run trains until morning. Everything would be left at a standstill just as the men left off. There were no means to get to Albany or New England last night, but the opening up of the great avenues of trade would be begun to-day. The railway company called upon Acting Superintendent of Police Byrnes last night for protection. The police are now guarding the company's tracks and property all along the line in this city. The inspector remained at headquarters all night. There has been no violence thus far.

ALBANY, Aug. 9.—The strike in this section extends to the switchmen, yardsmen and some brakesmen. The North Shore express carrying the United States mail arrived here at 8 o'clock last night from New York. An attempt was made to run it out of here at 10 o'clock, but it was stalled by strikers, who put on the air brake. The train got away, however, after midnight. No attempt was made to run another train from here last night.

ROCHESTER, Aug. 9.—The local assembly held a meeting last night. Orders were received from New York at 8 p.m. ordering a complete strike of the Knights of Labor on the Central-Hudson system. Train three was the first train affected in this city. The train reached this city on its regular time at 9½ p.m. and was abandoned by its crew of trainmen. One trainman was put on the train here and it proceeded on its way west on time.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—There is no trouble reported on the Lake Shore and Nickel Plate, which are Vanderbilt roads. It is thought there will be no strike on these roads.

A GREAT SUCCESS.

That's What Warden Durston Calls the Kemmler Electrocide.

ALBANY, Aug. 9.—Warden Durston passed here yesterday afternoon on his way to New York. "The execution was a great success," he said, "as the official reports will show. The public upon sober, second thought will feel that this is the better mode of carrying out legal executions. Read the statements of all the doctors carefully and you will see that the execution was successful. Much of the matter telegraphed from Auburn was for effect. Strip this of the verbage and a different impression will be formed."

JUBILANT BUENOS AYREANS.

The City Illuminated in President Pellegrini's Honor.

BUENOS AYRES, Aug. 9.—The citizens here are jubilant over the elevation of Dr. Pellegrini to the presidency. Crowds paraded the streets bearing banners and joyful devices. The city was illuminated last night. The governors of all the provinces have sent telegrams to Pellegrini congratulating him upon his accession.

Waterworks for Lindsay.

LINDSAY, Aug. 9.—Mr. Date of Toronto, representing a New York company, has made a proposal to the town, containing all the advantages of former offers with additional in the form of extra drinking fountains, greater privileges for flushing sewers, higher stand pipes and consequently greater pressure: but above all the supply to be drawn from artesian wells and not from the muddy Scugog. That one year hence Lindsay should have 7½ miles of watermains is likely to be an accomplished fact.

CUT OUT BY A DAUGHTER.

Charlie Thorne's Child Supplants Her Own Mother.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Everybody remembers Charlie Thorne, the actor—robust, handsome Charlie, with his fine physique, laughing eyes and taking ways—and everybody remembers his escapade with a woman—a wife—and its usual result—the condonation of the man's offense, the denunciation of the woman's.

Now comes a story from over the sea that Charlie Thorne's daughter Sharlie, a slip of a girl not quite 15 years old, has been married to the lover and companion of her own mother, a man with whom the woman had cast her fortunes after leaving her third, or what the world might complacently regard as her third husband. This trio are said to be living peacefully and happily in Geneva, Switzerland. The axiom of "like father like son" finds an illustration here, but with a change of sex, in "like daughter like mother," for the inclination of the child-wife towards the bizarre is wonderfully reflective of the madcap ventures of her mother in her younger days.

While yet in their teens, the mother was one of the belles of Philadelphia and moved in the best Quaker City society. She was the daughter of ex-Mayor Swift of Philadelphia, famous for the stand he took in the Abolition riots a few years before the war of the rebellion. Miss Swift was beautiful both in face and form. Of superb carriage, vivacious, intelligent, a student in belles-lettres, she attracted very many admirers in that particular set in which the Binneys, the Cadwaladers, the Sergeants and the Prices moved. Her marriage to Henri Brown of Philadelphia was a social event, and their prospects for a happy wedded life were excellent until the husband with strange persistency wrecked his life and lost his wife.

Mrs. Brown had an antipathy for actors and actresses and would not, under any circumstances, permit any member of the theatrical profession to be presented to her. It so happened that her husband was the intimate of several actors, among them Charlie Thorne, who was as much a favorite among men as he was among women. Mr. Brown announced one night that he intended to bring Thorne to dinner the next evening. To this Mrs. Brown strenuously objected. The husband insisted, the wife protested, until at last the quarrel became so bitter that Mrs. Brown exclaimed: "When you bring your actor friend in the front door I go out of the back." Determined to have his own way Brown took his wife at her word and said that she could go where it suited her, but once out of his house she should never return. Only then did Mrs. Brown give tearful obedience to her husband's wishes, and Charlie Thorne came to dinner.

The result was disastrous. The actor's personal magnetism, his wit, his cleverness in repartee and his adroitness in the art of delicate compliment soon changed the young wife's notion of actors. In a week Thorne was making love, in a fortnight his love was returned, and in a month he had eloped with the wife of his friend. She took her two children with her. Then came a remarkable circumstance. Mrs. Brown's magnificent head of chestnut hair became snowy white within a year, although her face retained its youthful contour and complexion and her figure was as graceful as of old.

The liaison continued until Thorne's death. Mrs. Brown was devotedly attached to the man who had stolen her from her husband, and watched over him until he died. Then she put on mourning, and for two years displayed all the outward tokens of grief-stricken widowhood. Brown, the betrayed husband, had meantime died.

About that time artistic and feminine New York was worshipping at the shrine of an olive-skinned Italian artist, Francesco Marra, who had a studio on Fourteenth-street. He was fond of painting actresses and young society women. Mrs. Browne-Thorne visited him out of curiosity, fell in love with him and married him. She then had a comfortable income of her own. Marra closed up his atelier, and with his companion and her three children—one of them a daughter of Thorne—sailed for Paris, where they engaged luxurious quarters on the Rue Francois Premier. Theodore Tilton was said to have been a frequent visitor there. But Mrs. Brown-Thorne did not live happily with her new husband. He abused her cruelly, and one day she ran off with a Signor Fenelli, a quondam friend of Marra.

It is this man who, after professing love for the mother and eloping with her, has made love to and married the 14-year-old daughter.

CANADIAN OARSMEN.

The Amateurs' Annual Meeting—Several Scullers Disqualified.

MONTREAL, Aug. 9.—The annual general meeting of the Canadian Association of Amateur Oarsmen was held here last night at the Windsor Hotel, Mr. A. R. Boswell, the president, in the chair. The treasurer's report showed an unexpended balance of $6.84. It was decided to hold the next annual regatta in Ottawa if the club of that city accepted the responsibility. It was explained that the Hop Bitters Cup was the property of the Association to be held as a perpetual challenge cup. Mr. Grant of the Baysides defended Gray's standing, but he was not heard. The subcommittee sent in their well-known report on the standing of several oarsmen, which was adopted, thus making professionals of the two Donohues, Lovell, Gray, Curran, Robertson and Delaney.

The following officers were elected: A. R. Boswell, Toronto, president; Col. Sweney, Toronto, first vice-president; J. J. Stewart, Hamilton, second vice-president; W. A. Littlejohn, Toronto, honorary secretary; James W. Hogg, Toronto, treasurer. Executive committee—R. W. Gowanlock, James Pearson and R. Hobson. It will thus be seen that the only change in the board is the substitution of Col. Sweney for Mr. Sydney Smith.

A Novel Scene in the Mountains of Old Kentucky—For the First Time in Two Years Court is Held in Perry County—The Judge Encircled by Bayonets.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 9.—The first session of court held in over two years in Hazard, Perry county, Ky., opened last Saturday. The famous vendetta and Perry county war cases are being tried there. The scene is one of the strangest ever witnessed in the United States. Hundreds of backwoodsmen and mountaineers are crowded into the little village. State troops with drawn bayonets encircle the judge and jury, while heavy detachments of the same are keeping a sharp outlook among those who have crowded into Hazard to listen to the trial of the murderers of Eversole. The town is isolated and a correspondent has just arrived in Cincinnati after traveling over one hundred miles before reaching a railroad. Several months ago the Court House was burned down at midnight by a masked band, whose cry was that Perry County had no need for law or lawyers. Judge J. T. Lilly had engendered the wrath of the mountain outlaws, who have more than once threatened his life. On account of the burning of the courthouse he was compelled to have a tent built in which to hold court. It is loosely constructed of light canvas and he sits behind a large store box, with the soldiers about him. On boards laid across small boxes the public is seated, the lawyers occupying chairs in front of the Judge. Among the latter is Judge William Hurst, who has not been back there since he was shot a few months ago until this term of court. He has been employed by Mrs. Eversole to assist in bringing to justice the murderers of her husband. The next day after he was shot Judge Hurst received a letter from Fulton French, the leader of the French faction, saying: "You get, and that quick."

Capt. Hurst was a brave soldier in the civil war and lost an eye at Mission Ridge, but he knew what French's warning meant and he left Hazard at once.

The proceedings on the first day were of the strangest character. Judge Lilly called court to order at 9 o'clock a.m. and Sheriff Fields walked to the edge of the tent and announced in a loud voice: "Hear ye, hear ye, the court is in session and all men within the hearing of the court are notified that the honorable judge of the Circuit Court is on the bench. God save the Commonwealth."

At this announcement an increased number of people crowded about the Judge. Sixteen men were found who could act as members of the Grand Jury according to the law. Judge Lilly then began his instructions to the Grand Jury. He has become somewhat brave with the militia back of him, and was very severe in his instructions. "As you all witness," said he, "I am again here to hold court. I have missed several terms in your county, and for reasons best known to myself I was satisfied that a court could not be held, and having had my life threatened, had every reason to believe I would be assassinated if I came to Perry. Now, it all lies with you. Do you want a court, that you may bring offenders to justice? I know the reputation of Perry too well, and when the people learn that a man's life is more valuable than that of a horse, men will be punished more severely for murder than for horse stealing."

People seemed amazed at the Judge's stern remarks, for he had never before talked so plainly, but he was now backed by the militia. Several tough-looking characters walked hurridly out of the tents as if anxious to inform some faction that Judge Lilly was getting too severe. Continuing, Judge Lilly said: "I now turn to a page in the statutes of Kentucky which defines the word murder and the law upon that subject. It seems that the people of Perry do not know that there is such a word. Why, gentlemen, this county is over seventy years old and but one man in all that time has been convicted for murder, and he for a short term of years in the penitentiary, though 500 men have been murdered in the county. This is appalling, and I again ask you, do you want justice? The records show you these things. I have called this extra term of court to give you one more opportunity to show that you want it. Now, do your duty. I will say that if this court amounts to nothing there will be no use of ever again trying to hold court in Perry. My life is in danger. I want you to diligently search and enquire into all crime in Perry County and bring criminals to justice. Render true verdicts. If it is murder say so. Don't say manslaughter. Yes, and arson. There stand the ruins of your court-house. They speak for themselves. I want you to find out who burned it. It is a matter which comes home to you and reaches your pocket-books. Set an example.

Nearly two hours was taken up with instructing the Grand Jury, and after some few preliminaries the Court adjourned over until Tuesday.

The sellers of liquor and "moonshiners" are biding in the mountains almost within a stone's throw of where Court is being held. Judge Lilly will order Capt. Gaither, who is in charge of the State troops, to seize all the whisky in Hazard and destroy it. A building used by a saloon keeper was taken charge of to-day by the troops, to be used for storing away goods belonging to the Commissary Department. A citizen walked into the door shortly after it had been broken open and made some remarks about the brandy left there by the fleeing saloonist and a lieutenant ordered him hustled out at the point of the bayonet, which was done. The social situation in Perry among men is not exaggerated. Many honest citizens are afraid to make a move towards indicting outlaws for fear of consequences after the troops are away. Of the great number of people killed within the past few years not one has ever been punished. Few, if any, have ever been arrested. Social lines have been so drawn through political means and otherwise that outlawry reigns unmanageable.

Burglars Make Another Rich Haul at Newport.

NEWPORT, R.I., Aug. 9.—Two robberies, two attempts at robbery and an attempt to blow out a safe are the principal items on the police record to-day. The police know nothing about the robbery of W. H. Osgood's cottage, whose jewelry, valued at $5000 was stolen. Among the jewels were diamonds and pearls. The thieves left behind them what would have been a monster haul of solid silver ornaments and toilet articles. This robbery has served to call to Newport a couple of New York detectives, who hope to be able to make something out of the job.

SATURDAY, AUGUST ., 1890.

TO THE NORTH POLE.

WITH the mercury among the nineties it is rather more cooling to think of Dr. Nansen's proposed voyage to the North Pole than to read Stanley's new work "In Dark Africa," says the Toronto Empire. Dr. Nasen has inspired sufficient enthusiasm in favor of his new plan of Arctic discovery to obtain a grant of $55,000 from the Norwegian parliament—a sum which he considers amply for his purpose, as he intends to accomplish his voyage with a crew of but twenty men in a vessel of only 170 tons. The proposed expedition is endorsed by several respectable authorities, amongst them M. Mohn, of the Meteorological Institute of Christiania; M. Boetzman, of the Paris Geographical Society, and M. Jacobsen. The little vessel that is to dare the terrible north is to be constructed so that it cannot be crushed by the ice, but if nipped will simply be forced up out of the water to ride on the moving floes. With this boat the intrepid explorer will allow the poleward currents to carry him almost anywhere they will.

More novel by far than the construction of the vessel is the route selected. Heretofore polar explorers have chosen almost entirely the route up Baffin's bay and Smith's sound, or the more easterly passage by way of Franz Josef land. But the drift of the currents in which the unfortunate Jeannette was carried from the northern Siberian waters, the length and height of the waves in that part of the Arctic basin and the supposed effect of the immense outflow of the great Siberian rivers have given color to the hypothesis that a general drift of the ocean pours towards Greenland across the polar basin. There is nothing in the discoveries of previous explorers to contradict this hypothesis, or to indicate that the sea of ancient ice—the palæocrystic sea of Sir George Nares—does not occupy a very circumscribed area on the American side of the pole. Further very strong support of Dr. Nansen's plan is found in the fact that several articles abandoned on the ice when the Jeannette sank north of Siberia were found three years later near Julianshaab on the west coast of Greenland. They had been carried clear across the Polar ocean on a piece of ice. Of course, whether the piece floated across the pole and down Smith's sound, or made its way through the tortuous ice-encumbered passages of the Canadian arctic archipelago, can only be conjectured, and there remains room for fearing that Dr. Nansen will simply accomplish an easterly passage to the Atlantic instead of a voyage to the pole itself.

The expedition intends to sail in February, 1892, and may be absent five years. Under an experienced Arctic explorer such as Nansen, a crew familiar with Arctic life, and a vessel equipped for almost all conceivable difficulties, there is much hope that the vessel will return to Europe safely. If it does, and whether or not it reaches the pole, the route to be traversed is so new that Dr. Nansen can scarcely fail to bring back with him experiences and discoveries of an interesting and perhaps of a valuable character. The pluck of the commander in daring an utterly unknown region commands admiration, and the wisdom shown in fitting out the enterprise secures for the expedition the heartiest wishes for its succes.

Correspondence of the Review.

WEATHER NOTES.— Another peculiar month has gone. In truth since the opening of the spring every month may come under the same category, but for thunder storms, heavy rains and sudden changes of weather July, in '90 has over-reached its former record. It came in sultry and hot with an even temperature up to the 12th, on which day we had it 88 degrees in the shade, at 2 p.m. on the 13th at 90 degrees, the 14th at 92 degrees, the 15th at 88 degrees, down to 82 degrees on the 16th, but on the 29th it again rattled up to 90 degrees, on the 30th to 88 degrees and on 31st at 90°, leaving the mean temperature of the month at 61° 19 31; we had thunder on 11 days or a little over the third of the month, the most severe being on the 1st, the 7th and 24th, the first falling 1 inch and 5 100 of an inch of water, the second 1 inch and 10-100 of an inch and the third 90-100 of an inch; rain fell on 16 days, a little over the half of the month, to the depth of 4 inches and 80 100 of an inch, being high for July; we had frost on 4 mornings, namely, the 19th, the 20th, the 21st and the 22nd, and auroral lights on the nights of 17th and 18th. The first barley cut here on the 18th and fall wheat on the 22nd. The following are the different points from which the wind was blowing at sunrise during the month, respectfully, namely:—South-east 2 days, north-west 15 days, south-west 2 days, north 2 days, west 3 days, north-east 3 days and south 2 days.

GENESIS OF THE WALTZ.

HOW IT HAS COME DOWN TO US IN ITS PRESENT BEAUTY.

Dancing from the Age of the Stately Minuet to the Reign of Strauss—Influences That Have Told in the Evolution of the Rockaway—What Will Be the Next Change?

The minuet was bred and nurtured among the old chateaux of Poitou. Its courtly movements and slow, deliberate pace speak conclusively of the antique gallantry which was ready at every step with a bow, and of the long, sweeping trains of the ladies, which forbade their fair wearers to indulge in any hastier motion. A certain variety of the minuet, named the pavana, brings this latter reason into excellent relief. The treatment of the train, which retarded the pace of the minuet, passed in the pavana into a special feature of the dance, and, indeed, was the origin of the singular name. "Pavana" means "the peacock dance." At certain places in the measure the gentlemen retreated to a considerable distance from their partners, leaving them in unimpeded possession of a great space around them. The ladies thereupon, having possession of the floor, swept their trains with certain mystic gyrations known only to themselves, and eventually sank into the pose of a studied and prolonged courtesy, the train assuming, during this statuesque moment of repose, the exact appearance of a peacock's tail.

The gavotte and the bourree can be variously assigned to Spain and France for their origin; but the jig—homely appellation!—can be clearly traced to a most respectable antiquity. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the name was variously written rigue, giga and geig, and signified simply "the fiddle dance," from the German geige, "a violin." We hear of these gigues, or "fiddle dances," as early as the days of the wandering minstrels, the peculiarity of them bring an entire license of step, so that the most untalented performer could join in. They became fashionable among the upper classes at the Watteau fetes of Louis XV.'s time, but were naturally danced with considerably more elegance than their primitive form required. They still retained, however their miscellaneous character, and far from any symmetry of motion being demanded, the gigue was not correctly executed unless several varieties of step were represented among the dancers. It was, in fact, "a medley."

We can scarcely overestimate the influence of Lully, the chef d'orchestre of Louis XIV., on the art of dancing. His band, which was as "the twenty-four violins," were required to furnish all the music for the fetes and balls of the brilliant Court to which they were attached. The gavotte and bourree have been ascribed to him, but probably without reason. The cotillon, however, has more legitimate claim to such a paternity, and most likely was at least perfected in the brilliant ball-rooms of Versailles.

Despite these thousand and one varieties of the dance, the genuine "round dance," to use the term at least in its modern signification, had no existence till some fifty or sixty years ago. Why this omission could have subsisted so long seems hard to see; from the first experiments in the style deterred mankind from venturing further. The "round dance" of the Greeks and the Middle Ages was simply a ring dance, and not by any means an approach to the round dance of today. The dancing dervishes of Turkey, however, and likewise the frenzied performers in the Italian tarantella must be credited with discovering a great secret of art long ere sixty years ago, and practising it to the amazement of all beholders, who thought them mad or struck by divine vengeance. First essays in round dancing, accompanied as they are by over powering giddiness, often lead the novice to the wild determination of spinning on and on until exhausted nature can do no more. The dancing dervishes are certainly affected with this fury. Once they begin to turn their rotation increases with ever-advancing celerity, until at last they "sleep" like a top, though still spinning round. The Italian tarantella was said to have come into existence from the effects of the bite of a poisonous spider (whence it derives its name); the result of which was to cause the venom-stricken patient to turn round and round in agony and frenzy. All dancers of tarantella were vulgarly supposed to have been bitten by this spider, and all pursued the principle of gyration in common with the dancing dervishes, namely, to spin round and round until they sank exhausted to the earth.

Such were the abortive and unconscious attempts which mankind made at the polka. When that dance first appeared fully fledged on the scene—it sprang on Europe like Minerva from the head of Jove, perfect and fully formed—the tendency of "round dancing" to go on when once begun and never stop was made apparent in its history. It was danced in a Vienna ball-room by way of experiment, and in three months had made the tour of Europe. In London, Paris, Madrid and Berlin everybody danced the polka. It is said that in these early days of the craze, the gravest personages were seen footing the dizzy dance, even judges and bishops not disdaining to test their powers therein, on the same principle that they might submit themselves to the experiment of "thought-reading" nowaday, or other similar craze. What was the home of the polka? Where had been its nursery before it made that sudden and sensational appearance in a Vienna ball-room sixty years ago? Some would derive it from the peasantry of Bohemia; but surely the name "polka," which is simply "polacca," points to Poland as the land of origin. Like many other things in the world, its origin is hidden in night. Nature is reluctant to reveal beginnings. The polka seems to us a very slow dance. Our ancestors thought it fast enough—but this was before mankind had become accustomed to "round" dancing.

The waltz, which was later in appearing, and was doubtless at its commencement an imitation of the polka, was danced exceedingly slowly in early life. Its original name was "landler," and it hails from the country district of Austria. The "landler" went gravely and deliberately round. To its slow motion the speed of the polka seemed fury. The elder Strauss must be accredited with the acceleration of the waltz to its present speed. Finding the effect of his music gain greatly from increased pace, he forced the time and made the dancer follow him. The original step of the waltz was the simple chasse, which, as is obvious, is identical with the step of the polka, except that the feet are brought more closely and more suddenly together. This was the valse deux temps Improvement in waltz melodies, which mark the time far more rhythmically and forcibly than in the early times they did, brought the valse a trois temps into being, wherein the steps are accomodated with greater precision to the beats of the music. The waxed floors of modern ballrooms have produced within the memory of the youngest among us the glide waltz and the rockaway waltz, in both of which the feet slip or slide over the floor in a manner amazing to behold. Perhaps the contemporaneous introduction of roller-skating had something to do with this innovation since the motion of the feet in both are the same.

What destinies await the waltz in future time is impossible at present to divine. One thing, however, seems certain—so popular and universally known is this dance, compared to the dissemination of any other specific piece of human knowledge, that amid a distant posterity, when all our achievements have faded from human memory, we shall still be known as the generation "in whose time the waltz was danced."

WAS IT A MURDER?

The Body of a Man Found in the River Near Fort Niagara.

YOUNGSTOWN, N.Y., Aug. 9.—The body of a man found in the river near Fort Niagara suggests foul play. It appears to be that of a man about 40 years of age, 5 feet 7 inches in height, dark brown hair, sandy chin whiskers mixed with grey, grey eyes and weighing about 160 pounds. It did not appear to have been in the water more than three or four days. The wearing apparel consisted of a pair of calfskin boots, patched on the inside, dark cotton socks darned at the toe with blue yarn. The top of the head was fractured as if a blow had been dealt with a club, and the closed mouth betokened that the man had died before getting into the water. The finger nails were loose, the left arm fractured below the shoulder, the right leg out of joint at the hip and the left leg fractured above the knee.

The Single Tax.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—It may seem superfluous to say anything more about the single tax after Mr. J. H. Burnham's able articles in the REVIEW. When Mr. Burnham says in one of his articles that he knows no other single tax man who believes in compensation he says what is the truth. There is no doubt but the single tax will come, as it is spreading rapidly in all English speaking countries, but not with compensation, as that, I think, would make matters worse than now. It would be like emptying water out of one vessel into another with a leaking dipper. Between government assessors and equalizing commissioners and other officials there would be a great waste, and I fear it would be like the man in the parable, the last state would be worse than the first. Mr. Burnham is, I know, a sincere single tax man and also its able advocate. It is only in the mode of bringing it he differs from other single tax men, but the best and greatest sometime make mistakes. Even Moses in striking the rock to bring forth water made one, and many other great and good men also. Mr. Burnham seems to think that because land was got legally that those called owners ought to be compensated. But what is legal? Legality! Nearly all wars, rapine, murders, sacks and seiges. National departments for these purposes were first made legal by the enlightened Christian nations before they began their devil's work, as well as by Pagan or Mohommedans. Legality! It is frightful to think of what was done legally. American slavery was legal in its day, and I am sorry to say preached so in what is called Christian pulpits. If Uncle Tom had escaped from Legree before he had killed him, it would have been every United States citizen's legal duty to help to catch him and bring him back and deliver him up to Legree to finish the whipping. That's legality. I suppose all legality is not wrong, but no doubt the greater portion is. Land differs from all other kinds of property. It is not a product of labor, but was furnished by the Creator for the use of mankind. It is not perishable like labor's products that want constantly renewing. It was here thousands of years before we were born and will be after we are dust and ashes. As use is what it was made for it is self evident there never was one acre to hold out of use or for speculative purposes. The Creator of it in Leviticus says: "The land is mine; it shall not be sold. Its use I give to the children of men." He gave it to Abraham, to Isaac, to Jacob and their seed after them. If He made no one an owner, He controls it still in all its motions, what the greatest owner or autocrat on earth could not do in the slightest degree. What presumption it is then to call themselves owners. There are acres of land in cities worth millions of dollars originally got for nothing or a mere trifle. What has increased them so enormously? Population. Take population away back to be worth nothing they go again. The single tax theory is, first, that each man is entitled to all that his labor produces. Therefore no tax should be levied on the product of labor 2nd. All men are equally entitled to what God has created and to what is gained by the growth and improvement of the community of which they are a part. Therefore no one should be permitted to hold natural opportunities without a fair return to all for any special privileges thus accorded to him, and that value which the growth and improvement if the community attaches to land should be taken for the use of the community. John Stewart Mill says the land of every country belongs to the people of that country, and individuals called land owners have no right to it in morality and justice. The profit that attaches to it by reason of population he calls the unearned increment. Ricardo calls it rent. The Bible calls it the profit of the land, and that it is for all. They are all the same with different names. Now, Mr. Editor, if population make the land values why should not in justice go to them who made it? If the unearned increment on rent belongs to them why not have it without paying or compensating for their own? If, as the Bible says, the profit belongs to all, why should not all get it? No word in that book about compensation. As man is a land animal and cannot live without it and as it was given to him for use by its real Owner, therefore land monopoly and the holding of it out of use must be the greatest crime on earth, as it is clearly anti to its Maker's intent. For this robbery is not like the robbery of a horse or sum of money that ceases with the act. It is a fresh and continued robbery and goes on every day and every hour. It is not from the produce of the past that rent is drawn; it is from the produce of the present. It is a toll levied on labor constantly and continuously. Consider what land rent is. It does not rise spontaneously from land it is not due to anything the owner has done. He may be travelling in foreign land; he may be an idiot, an infant or in a lunatic asylum and still the rent goes on, because not he but the community make it. Have not those great land monopolists enough of the unearned increment already? Rather should they be made to disgorge than give them compensation. Just think of compensating Wm. W. Astor with over a hundred of million of unearned increment made by the increase of the population of New York city. How would those great railway magnates be compensated who commenced perhaps with a few thousand dollars and have so managed matters for themselves that now they have millions? They can build palaces with a million and give their daughters a million for pin money who go junketing through Europe in search of a prince with as much perseverance as Japhet in search of his father. Nice people to compensate. I fear, Mr. Editor, this article would be too long to say any more just now, though the subject is not half exhausted and could be illustrated indefinitely.

Yours, etc.,
JOSEPH LUNDY.

"I HATE WRITING LETTERS"
is the remark often heard.
And Why?
Because Paper is'nt handy, the Ink has given out, Pens are no good—and its not a fair day for writing.
There's little excuse for the paper not at hand when one pound of Fine Cream Linen Note Paper, ruled and unruled can be had for 25 cents at the REVIEW Stationery Store. It is superior English made Paper, looks well, writes easily, is thick and good looking. Now that the ounce is mailed for 3 cents thick paper is much used. Envelopes to match. A CRICKET MATCH.

Campbellford and Peterborough—The Visitors Defeated.

A team of Campbellford cricketers came here yesterday and played a match with the Peterborough club. The Peterboroughs went to bat first and ran up a score of 116 runs before the last wicket fell. The visitors then wielded the willow, but the bowling of Stratton and Attewell was too strong for them and they only made 39 runs. They followed on with their second innings, and although the pro. and Stratton did not bowl this time they were retired with 48, or a total for both innings of 87, leaving the Peterborough players the victors by an an innings an 31 runs.

The bowling of Attewell and Stratton in the first innings was good, as was also that of W. F. Hamilton, Rutherford and Goldsmith in the second. Goldsmith, who is a junior of the club, made the remarkably good score of 42 at bat in the first innings, more than the whole team of visitors made in their first and nearly as much as they did in their second innings. He also made a good record in bowling, taking six wickets for ten runs in less than six overs, and showed the metal of a good cricketer.

The score was as follows:—

The stock consists principally of the celebrated White Label, and the number of cars that have come to his address these few months past speaks volumes for the ale. d27w31

THE RIFLE.

The seventh and last of the series of Military Rifle League matches was shot by the 57th team at the ranges yesterday. It was a fine day for shooting. Several improvements have been made at the ranges lately. A new revolving canvas target has been added, making four of these fine targets. The butts are now among the finest in the country, the range being perfectly level for a thousand yards, with a large hill behind the targets, which makes the shooting perfectly safe.

Enlargement at the Golden Lion.

An increasing business requires increased accommodation. This is a natural consequence that Mr. Robert Fair has had pressing upon his attension and the result is that changes are being made in his dry goods establishment to give more room. While passing the Golden Lion a REVIEW reporter heard hammer and saw at work inside and on entering to make enquiries found carpenters busily at work. A large hallway ran along the south side of the store, and this has been taken out and the space formerly occupied by it is now thrown into the store. The shelving and counters are being moved back, and the store will be considerably enlarged by the change. A similar change has been made in the second storey, with similar advantage on that floor. By these changes more space is given for the dry goods and staple departments in the store and for the carpets and mantle and dress making departments. A comfortable reception room has been formed at the top of the stairway, and the dress and mantle making departments have been given quarters in the front of the spacious second storey. A new linoleum has been laid in the millinery department, and the whole establishment improved. A new hardwood floor has been laid in the store, as a solid business requires solid footing, and this makes quite an improvement. The well and sky light has been enlarged and continued farther to the rear, thus throwing the strong light into the centre of the store. The alterations have made a great change, and Mr. Fair's store is now a spacious and well lighted establishment. The work is being carried out under the careful superintendence of Mr. James Graham. Incidentally the reporter learned that Mr. Fair has had a very satisfactory season's trade, particularly the midsummer business, which is looked upon as the dull season.

KIDD's comfortable camping shoes are blessed by every wearer. When you meet a camper look at his feet and if he wears Kidd's shoes you can endorse his note—not Kidd's note—but the other fellow's. He's sure to be respectable and responsible. Buy your shoes at Kidd the shoe man's store. d28tf

A RICE LAKE POET.

One of the Foremost Canadian Poets Formerly of Gore's Landing.

The poems of Mr. Archibald Lampman, of Ottawa, when collected and published in December, 1888, were deservedly received with great favor, and it was at once acknowledged that he had taken a foremost position among the poets of Canada. It is not only in his own country that Mr. Lampman's poetry is known, for it is appreciated in the United States and elsewhere, and he is a welcome contributor to the United States magazines.

Mr. Lampman was, as a boy, a resident on the shore of Rice lake, and a biographer in the Dominion Illustrated attributes some of his finest work to the beautiful scenery of this lake, which no doubt left lasting impressions on a mind so susceptible to the beauties of nature. A short sketch of the life of this poet, taken partly from the article in the Dominion Illustrated, will no doubt be of interest.

Mr. Lampman was born on the 17th of November, 1861, at the little village of Morpeth, on the shore of Lake Erie. Situated in the County of Kent, on what is known as the Talbot road, the poet's birthplace is in the very garden of Canada, surrounded on every side by productive farms and rich fruit lands. His parents were both of German families which came to New England in the middle of the last century. At the outbreak of the war of independence his father's family removed to Canada. They were staunch U.E. Loyalists, and took an active part in the war of 1812. His mother was a Gesner, of the Gesner and Stewart families, well-known in Nova Scotia. Mr. Lampman's father is a Church of England clergyman, and in the course of events he was removed from Morpeth in 1866, and was sent to the parish of Perrytown in the County of Durham. After a sojourn there of about a year the family, which now consisted of one boy and three girls, removed to Gore's Landing, on Rice Lake. Here the poet's schooling was commenced at a private institution. After attending this school for some time he afterwards attended a public school. The family could never be considered well off, and it is chiefly owing to his mother, a woman of high ideals and of rare energy and bravery, that young Lampman was enabled to enjoy the best educational advantages that the country afforded. In 1876 he was sent to Trinity College school, Port Hope, which is modelled after the English public schools, and which is a preparatory institution for Trinity College, Toronto. Here he was very successful, taking many prizes, and in his last year was head boy at the school. In 1879 he entered Trinity College, Toronto, and, aided by the scholarships he obtained, he remained there until 1882, when he took the degree of B.A. with honors. At Trinity he was always foremost in literary matters, editing the college paper, writing constantly in both prose and verse for that and another college journal. After graduating, Mr. Lampman accepted the assistant-mastership of the Orangeville High School, and although fitted for such a position by his learning, he found the trials of the post unbearable. In January of 1883 he received an appointment in the Post Office Department, and removed to Ottawa, where he continues to reside. In 1887 he married Maud, youngest daughter of Edward Playter, M.D. From the time of his removal to Ottawa his literary activity commenced, and he has ever since continued composing, and from time to time contributes to the Canadian literary paper, The Week, and the American magazines. In December, 1888, his first collection of poems, entitled "Among the Millet," was published.

Scribner's Magazine for July contains the following by Mr. Lampman entitled "To the Cricket."—

Didst thou not tease and fret me to and fro,
 Sweet spirit of this summer-circled field,
 With that quiet voice of thine, that would not yield
Its meaning, though I mused and sought it so?
But no I am content to let it go,
 To lie at length and watch the swallows pass,
 As blythe and restful as the quiet grass,
Content only to listen, and to know
That years shall turn and summers yet shall shine,
 And I shall lie beneath these swaying trees,
 Still listening thus; haply at last to seize
And render in some happier verse divine
That friendly, homely, haunting speech of thine,
 That perfect utterance of content and ease.

The Music Received.

The band rehearsal in the drill shed last night was attended and enjoyed by a large number. The music that all the bands are to play in concert in Hamilton has been received. It is "Nearer, My God, to Thee," with variations, arranged by the conductor of the 13th band, and is an excellent piece of music. The band will leave for Hamilton on Monday morning. May the expectations of the members be more than realized.

NORMAL MUSICAL CLASS.

A Most Successful Season Closed—Appreciation of Teacher and Method.

The Toronto Empire of this morning says:—The music class for teachers under Prof. Holt, of Boston, held in the Normal school building, closed yesterday after a most successful session. A large number of public school teachers and musicians attended and much interest was manifested in Mr. Holt's progressive methods. By simply applying the recognized principles of teaching to the study of music, the difficulties of teaching little children to read are overcome without any change of notation. The Minister of Education in his remarks congratulated Mr. Holt on his work and stated that the missionary work in music would be continued until the subject was placed on an educational basis in the schools of Ontario. Before closing the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Moved by J. W. Graham, seconded by R. Greenlees: We, the teachers in class assembled at the close of the term, desire to express our high appreciation of the instruction in methods in music by Prof. Holt, of Boston, and also to thank the Hon. the Minister of Education for having secured for the teachers of the province an instructor who is so thoroughly conversant with the teaching of music on educational principles as Mr. Holt, and we trust the department will next year again secure his services. We feel that the application of the principles as taught by Mr. Holt will not only assist us greatly in the teaching of music, but also enable us to be more successful in presenting other subjects.

Signed on behalf of the class,

G.A. COLE, Deseronto.
HATTIE E. WHELPLEY, Mt. Forest.
TERESA MCKENNA, Belleville.
R. F. GREENLEES, Picton.
J. W. GRAHAM, Brantford.
J. H. KETCHAM, Peterborough.

A vote of thanks was also tendered Mr. S. H. Preston for his work in arranging the class and assisting the teachers.

KNOW HOW —TO— KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs.—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1890.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

And on they went again—now slipping on the ice—now in the snow to the knees—and anon stumbling along over frozen hubbles and deep holes. At length the guide stopped and opened a small gate which was fixed in a high, thick brick wall. Ruric hesitated here again. He had no weapon of any kind. If he had had even a pistol, or a sword, he would have cared not. But he did not show his thoughts to his guide. The gate opened with a crack upon its frosty hinges, and by the dim starlight the youth could see an open court beyond, and further still, a house of some kind loomed up.

"This place seems not to be used much," remarked Ruric, as he saw the snow in the court was trodden but little—only one or two tracks being visible from the gate to the house."

"Ah—yes—you said—what?"

"I said this place didn't seem to be used much," the youth repeated, though he was sure the fellow heard the first time.

"Ah, yes—a—the usual entrance is th other way, by the sledge path."

"And where is that?" Ruric asked, not being able to see any such path.

"Oh—it's around on the other side."

By this time they had reached the door of the house, which our hero could now see had an old, dilapidated appearance, and the guide plied the iron knocker with zeal. Ere long a man made his appearance with a lantern in his hand.

"Ah—has the gun-maker come?" the latter asked.

"Yes," returned the guide.

"Well—I'm glad he's here, but I don't believe Orsa is fit to move," said the first speaker. And then turning to Ruric he said:

"But I'm glad you've come, sir, for the lieutenant wishes to see you very much. This way, sir."

This was all so frank and prompt that the young man began to think he had been a foo' for being frightened. He followed the man with the lantern into the hall, and from thence down a long flight of stairs into a basement. The lantern did not give much light, but it was sufficient to reveal the fact that the house was an old one, and not very large, for Ruric could see windows upon the opposite side of the hall which looked out of doors. As he reached the foot of the stairs he found himself upon a brick floor, and he saw that the walls were of stone. A little further on a door was opened, and this l-d to a small apartment within which was a fireplace, and a good fire burning.

"There, good sir," said a second guide, "if you will wait a few moments I will go and see how the lieutenant is."

As soon as Ruric was left alone he looked about him. The room was of moderate size for a small house, and the idea of inhabiting the cellars was a common one in Moscow during the winter season. The windows, two in number, were close up to the ceiling, and very small, and were patched with pieces of board in two or three places. Ere long the man came back, and with him three others, one of whom the youth recognized as the individual who had conducted him to the house.

"Orsa will see you, sir," said he with the lantern.

Ruric arose to follow him, the other three men approaching the fire as though they would remain there. He had reached the door and passed through into the room beyond, when he thought he heard footsteps behind him. It was a sliding, shuffling sound, and he turned his head to see what it was. As he did so he received a blow which staggered him, and which would have felled an ordinary man to the floor. He gathered himself quickly up, but before he could fairly turn about he received a second blow, heavier than the first, which brought him upon his knees. In an instant all four of the men were upon him, and he could see that they had ropes in their hands with which to bind him. With all his might he threw the fellow who held his right hand back against the wall, and another he sent in an opposite direction, and in a moment more he would have been upon his feet; but just at that instant a noose was adroitly slipped over his head, and as the rope tightened about his neck he was drawn back upon the brick floor again.

"Now resist any more, and we'll choke you as sure as fate," cried the man who had held the lantern, and who now had a hold upon the rope.

"Oh!" groaned Ruric; while the massive cords worked like cables in his arms and shoulders, "give me a fair chance. Let me be up and free—then look your doors, if you please."

"No, no, good sir," replied the ruffian, with a wicked smile. "We know your power, and we are not disposed to test it further. We have had trouble enough already. Shall we—"

The man stopped speaking, for at that moment another noose was slipped down over Ruric's head, and ere he could avoid it, it had been drawn tightly about his arms. He was now at the mercy of his captors, and having rolled him over upon his breast they proceeded to secure his arms behind him, which being done they bade him to rise. Of course he could have no desire to lie there upon the cold bricks, and he got upon his feet as well as he could.

"Now, Ruric Nevel, I will conduct you to your own apartment," said the leader of the gang.

"But wherefore is this?" the gun-maker gasped, rendered almost speechless with the mingled emotions of surprise and anger. "Why have ye done this? Whose hirelings are ye that ye thus waylay and seize upon an honest man who has done no harm to any of you?"

"Never mind that now, sir," the ruffian coolly answered, "suffice it for you to know that you are safe for the present."

"But will ye not tell me what this is for? There is some intent.

"Yes—and come with me and you shall see. Come."

Thus speaking the man turned once more, and having picked up his lantern he moved on, while the others, taking Ruric by the arms, followed after. The prisoner made no resistance now, for he knew that it would be useless. At a short distance another flight of stairs was reached.

"Down here?" uttered Ruric, with a shudder.

"Of course. You'd freeze up here."

These words struck harshly upon the youth's soul, for it meant that he was to be detained in this lonesome place.

At the bottom of these stairs they came to a vaulted passage, at the end of which was a door. This was opened, and Ruric was led through into the place beyond. He cast his eyes quickly about, and he found himself in a narrow apartment, the walls and floor of which were of stone, and the roof of brick, the latter being arched. In one corner was a couch, and upon it was some old skins.

And here the youth was to be left. His guide simply pointed to the low couch, and then turned away. Ruric asked a question, but it was not answered. In a few moments more the heavy door was closed upon him, and he was in total darkness. He sought the couch, and with a deep groan he sank down!

To be continued.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Unfavorable Crop Reports—Rise in Breadstuffs—Business Failures.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Special telegrams to Bradstreet's corroborate late favorable crop reports from the south and southwest, and the rather unfavorable grain reports from the west and northwest. Southern merchants at interior distributing points are ordering with considerable freedom owing to the size of the yields of cotton, rice and other products. On the firmer tone of the money market with some manipulation of rates and with the aid of reports of damage to the corn crop, the New York stock market was depressed and unsettled, prices recovered slightly at the close of the week, though stock speculation continues dull and uninteresting. Reserved stocks peculation has decreased the volume of July bank clearings at New York and Boston below the totals for recent months, but the grand total of clearings at 52 cities during July aggregates $4,698,205,777, a gain over July last year of 207 per cent.

The wheat markets have been more bullish on crop damage reports, and prices are up 2½c. Indian corn has been likewise affected and gains 3⅝c per bushel, and oats out of sympathy are 5⅝c higher. Cable despatches, exclusively to Bradstreet's, show that the world's wheat stocks decreased 383,000 bushels during July, 1890, while in 1889 they increased 2,825,000 bushels. European afloat and American wheat stocks decreased during the seven months ended Aug. 1, 1890, 46,250,000 bushels as compared with a decrease of 61,627,000 bushels in a like portion of 1889.

A feature of the week has been the buoyancy of leather. Boot and shoe manufacturers have not thus far been able to secure a corresponding advance, though it is unlikely that additional orders will be taken at former prices. Hides, too, are strong.

Cattle and hogs continue to come forward at the west, the former being $5 per cwt. higher than last week. In hog products there has been an active demand and firm prices.

Pig iron is unchanged in price, although a few makers report a better demand. Steel rail makers after consultation announce that prices will soon be advanced $1 to $1.50 per ton.

Drygoods are in increased demand, cotton goods prices were affected by the high cost of raw material and are very firm. Print cloths and brown and bleached goods tend upward. Some improvement is noted in the demand for men's wear woolens. Raw wool continues weak, although rather more business has been done in leading seaboard markets. Sugar is 1-16c lower.

Dun-Wiman's Report.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Dun, Wiman & Co. in their Weekly Review of Trade say: Less favorable crop prospects, closer money markets and further delay in action on the Tariff Bill in the Senate have increased the uncertainty which retards business. In spite of a sharp advance in wheat, corn, oats, oil and coffee, the general average of prices for commodities is a shade lower than a week ago and the stock market has been dull and depressed.

The present state of trade throughout the country appears satisfactory for the season and reports are almost uniformly confident.

The crop outlook is, on the whole, less promising. Chi ago reports that hot and dry weather is cutting down the yield, though complaint is not general in other respects. There is evidence of irregularity of conditions. St. Paul and Detroit note excellent prospects. St. Louis reports corn suffering in the southwest, and Milwaukee great need for rain. Wheat has risen ⅝c. with sales of 26,000,000 bushels, corn 3⅛c., with sals of 18,000,000 bushels and oats 5c, while pork, hogs and cotton are unchanged. Iron ore and pig are inactive and weak. The outlook depends largely upon the extent of injury to crops, the action of Congress regarding duties and the foreign complications which affect the demand for gold.

Domestic exports of products continue small and imports very large, and it is still uncertain how far foreign selling of American securities will go. Better prices came in the stock exchange on Friday, but the trouble between shippers and trunk lines as to eastbound bills of lading is not yet settled.

The business failures during the last seven days as reported are: For the United States 180, Canada 29, total 209 as compared with 189 last week. For the corresponding week last year the figures were 201, representing 164 in the United States and 37 in Canada.

Good for Seven Years.

MORRISBURG, Aug. 9.—Some years ago William Isaac Daguerre of Shelburne, Ont., here he had resided with his wife, went to Wales and was employed on the work of building the double track on the Grand Trunk Railway. In November, 1888, he married a daughter of Mr. Michael Casselman, who resides in the vicinity of Aultsville, since which time he has visited both wives unknown to the other. However, wife No. 1 discovered his infamy, came here and had him arrested at the residence of Walter Bedstead on Thursday evening. He was taken to Aultsville, where he was brought before the proper authorities and committed to Cornwall to stand his trial. Wife No. 2 appeared against him with a child about three months old. He will probably get about seven years in the penitentiary.

Suicide at Merritton.

ST. CATHARINES, Aug. 9.—At 12½ yesterday a tailor named T. J. Kennedy, who lives in Thorold, deliberately jumped off the bridge crossing the waterway in front of the Merritton cotton mills. He floated on the surface for about 20 yards and then disappeared. Kennedy was probably under the influence of liquor at the time. He leaves a [illegible] in Thorold.

Skin Diseases

Itching, Burning, Scaly, Crusted, Pimply and Blotchy Cured by the Cuticura Remedies.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONIAL.

About two years ago I was attacked with an inflamatory disease on my face (petyriasis), which was very troublesome, being extremely itchy and painful, giving rise to the production of small bran-like scales. My general health was affected by it. I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT, CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP according to directions, and experienced a change from the very first day; they worked wonderfully and by their continued used for about five months I was completely cured. I have unbounded faith in the CUTICURA REMEDIES. I regard the CUTICURA RESOLVENT as the very best blood purifier; a trial will convince anyone. The CUTICURA SOAP is the best in the market, and cheap at twice its present price. I shall use no other for the toilet and bath. With the prevalence of skin diseases among us as a people (and they are the most difficult to deal with), I regard the CUTICURA REMEDIES of more important and intrinsic value to the world than any other medicine now before the public. I am, with deep gratitude,

(Rev.) WM. CHEELMAN, York Corner, Me.

BULGARIA'S THRONE.

THE CANDIDATURE OF PRINCE WALDERNMAR WITHDRAWN.

One of the Results of King William's Visit to England—The Kaiser Going to Russia as the Apostle of Peace.

BERLIN, Aug. 9.—One of the results of the interviews at Osborne between Queen Victoria, Emperor William, the Prince of Wales and Lord Salisbury is the withdrawal of the candidature of Prince Waldemar for the throne of Bulgaria. Family reasons, notably the protest of the King of Greece, influenced this decision. Under the promptings of Emperor William both the Queen and the Prince of Wales are beginning to take a more active part in foreign politics in England.

To-night's Post gives suggestive prominence to a special London despatch saying that just as the Emperor's visit to Osborne in 1889 afforded the starting point leading to an Anglo-German agreement, and as the visit of the Prince of Wales to Berlin was not without bearing upon the treaty, so Foreign Office circles now believe that there was a political significance in the present visit of the Kaiser, the outcome of which may astonish the world. The Post's allusion, as read here under the light of the reports circulating in the official world, point to a project of the Kaiser's to obtain the Czar's assent to another Berlin Congress, aiming at a general European peace compact, implying a limitation of armaments. Lord Salisbury's declaration at the Mansion House that Europe was never more pacific and that the nations were growing inclined to compromise indicated the strain of his communication with the powers. The Kaiser is going to Russia as the apostle of peace, and now desires the Kaiserin to accompany him. The Czarina ignored the approaches of Gen. Von Schweinitz, the German Ambassador, regarding the reception of the Kaiserin, so the Grand Duke of Hesse, on the solicitation of Emperor William, has started for St. Petersburg to arrange for the Kaiserin's visit.

The belief in official circles here is that the Czar will treat the League of Peace as a futility unless associated with the restoration of Russian dominance in the Balkans and the permanent satisfying of France. Whatever the Kaiser's peace ideas may be, his movements tend to strengthen Germany in the event of war. His visit to Norway was immediately successful in inducing the Government to consent to the recruitment of Norwegians and Swedes for the German navy, an ample supply of fine seamen being thus afforded. King Oscar also accepted an invitation to be present at the grand land and sea manœuvres which will take place in September. King Leopold similarly marks the entente achieved at Ostend by promising his presence at the manœuvres. The screeches of the French press over the extension of German alliances are not unprovoked.

The Kaiser Takes Heligoland.

BERLIN, Aug. 10.—The German Imperial yacht Hohenzollern and the accompanying squadron anchored off Heligoland at 10 o'clock this morning. Emperor William and Prince Henry landed at noon and were met by Herr von Boetticher. The inhabitants gave the Emperor and his brother a hearty reception. The Imperial party proceeded at once to the overland, where an openair service was held. The Emperor delivered a short address and the German flag was then hoisted, battery at the same time firing a salute. Two thousand marines were reviewed by the Emperor, who afterwards received an address presented by the inhabitants of the island. After taking luncheon in the casino the Emperor departed at 3½ o'clock amid the cheers of the [illegible].

HAMILTON'S BLOWOUT.

The Band Tournament—Mother and Daughter—The T., H. & B.'s Tunnel.

HAMILTON, Aug. 9.—Monday will be the citizens' holiday and will, if the weather is favorable, be a big day. The band tournament will be the great attraction in the city. Conductor Innes of the Brooklyn 13th Regiment Band will be the judge at the band competition.

A remarkable case came before the police magistrate this morning. Mrs. Mary Burrows, the widow of the late John C. Burrows (who was a well-known and highly-esteemed lake captain), was charged by her daughter, a girl of 15, with non-support. The girl said that she had reason to believe that her mother was going to run away with a butcher of the north end of the city, having sold her furniture and made other preparations that denoted a hasty flight. The girl is enciente, her betrayer being a well-known sport and tough of the north end. Mrs. Burrows says the whole trouble is that her daughter wants her to take her paramour along with her when she goes away. "I am willing to support my daughter and take her with me," said she to-day; "but I'm not going to support that loafer. The girl can come with me or she can stay with her man, just as she pleases; but I won't pay his way." The evidence shows that the sport in question has been on exceedingly intimate terms with the family, including Mrs. Burrows herself, and has been accustomed to treat the females as if they were his private property—condescending so far as to take their money and give them black eyes occasionally. Mrs. Burrows is still in custody.

Capt. Hendrie, who sprained his ankle at the Niagara camp, was out for a drive to-day. It will be some time before he can walk.

The Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo engineers are preparing plans for the tunnel under the cemetery, and it is likely that before long permission to build it will be asked from the City Council. The tunnel will be 1000 feet long.

THE CENTRAL TIE-UP.

ALL THE VANDERBILT ROADS INVOLVED.

No Freight Trains Moved Saturday or Sunday—Passenger Trains Combined and Sent Through Under Difficulties—All the Vanderbilt Lines Affected.

ALBANY, Aug. 10.—Master Workman Lee, in an interview yesterday afternoon concerning the status of the New York Central strike, said: "The present policy of the Central road is to inaugurate the policy which has been pursued by Austin Corbin on the Reading Railroad and is so viewed by every man employed by the company who is a member of any labor organization. The main question at issue is our contention for the reinstatement of the men whom the company have been discharging for the past three weeks. These men have been faithful in the discharge of their duties, and that has been conceded by the officers of the company in the past. No question has ever been raised as to their fitness for their respective positions, nor have these wholesale discharges been made because the business of the road demanded it. It was purely and simply because these men were members of the Knights of Labor."

When asked to what branches of the service the strike extended he said to all branches but the engineers and firemen, but that the freight engineers and all the firemen would go out Saturday night. This will leave only the passenger engineers in the service of the road. He said the West Shore Railway would also be tied up at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Pledged Against Acts of Violence.

Mr. Lee then read this letter which he has sent to Gov. Hill:

"ALBANY, Aug. 9, 1890.

"To Hon. David B. Hill, Governor:

"YOUR EXCELLENCY,—D.A. 246, K. of L. railway employes, are to-day engaged in a struggle for American liberty and manhood. The press of the state intimate the calling out of the militia. We beg to assure you that no act shall be committed or any attempt made to violate the law of our state. We are citizens of New York and pledge our honor to depend on the justice of our cause and not on acts of violence or lawlessness. The police departments of our different cities are, in our judgment, amply qualified and sufficient to maintain the public peace, and D. A. 246, K. of L., assure Your Excellency that they and those whom they represent will do all in their power to maintain and preserve law and order. We will thereby gain not only the sympathy of American citizens who love fair play but effectually checkmate the efforts of Pinkerton thugs who are endeavoring to promote disorder.

"Yours very respectfully,

"EXECUTIVE BOARD D. A. 246."

Arbitration Commissioner Donovan went to New York last night, where the head quarters of the Board of Arbitration will be during the strike. Mr. Donovan refused to divulge the nature of the questions discussed at the board's consultation with the employes last night. From the tone of the leaders who attended the conference, however, it was learned that Mr. Donovan would be telegraphed at his house in Brooklyn Sunday noon asking him, on behalf of the striking employes, to make overtures to Third Vice-President Webb and Superintendent Toucey on Monday morning for an arbitration of the questions in dispute. The leaders will telegraph Mr. Donovan on what terms they will resume work.

Superintendent Bissell, when informed of this action of the employes, said the road would not become a party to any arbitration. They propose to fight it out and will not give way on any question in dispute.

Forty Pinkerton detectives arrived here last night and after having dinner in the depot restaurant marched out and scattered on picket duty in and about the station and in the vicinity of the switches.

Mayor Manning, shortly before midnight last night, was served with a notice signed by C. C. Clark, First Vice-President of the New York Central Road, saying that the company thought their property was in danger and calling upon him to take proper action tending to protect the company's property.

A SERIOUS COMPLICATION.

Several Strikes Threatened—West Shore Switchmen Go Out.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—When spoken to about the rumor that the locomotive engineers would join the K. of L. in the strike, Vice-President Webb admitted that if this occurred it would complicate matters very greatly.

Secretary Shays of the K. of L. arrived in this city at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He at once sought out Mr. Holland and Mr. Valentine and the three had a prolonged conference. The Brotherhood of Engineers and the members of the local assembly of the K. of L. arranged for a conference and everything looks as if the engineers would go out.

At 5 p.m. it was given out at the strikers' headquarters that there would be a strike on the West Shore road at once. It was also said that a strike would be ordered Sunday on the Michigan Central, Canada Southern and Chicago and Northwestern.

From 11 o'clock yesterday morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon all trains over the New York, New Haven and Hartford road left and arrived on schedule time. There was a slight delay, however, in the turning of the switches in the yard. The men in the yard who have taken the places of the strikers are working the switches with crow bars, lever men being on strike. It is reported that over 100 men who were laid off on account of the strike have joined the K. of L. along the New York Central tracks, thereby increasing their number.

The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company yesterday issued this notice: "The passenger department of the New York Central pronounces the complete resumption of through and local service both on the main line and the Harlem division."

Fifty of the 54 night force of freight switchmen on the West Shore Railway at Weehawken struck at 7.40 last night. This left the yard almost deserted. Preparations to meet the emergency were immediately made by Chief Dispatcher Williams and men were sent out to get the track in readiness for the dispatching of the 8½ Buffalo express. As none of the passenger car brakemen had abandoned their posts this train was put off at 9 o'clock, having suffered only half an hour's delay. At 10 o'clock everything in the yard at Weehawken was quiet and the work of making up trains was going on. All the incoming trains were arriving at the depot on time. The station officials said that no other men were out on the road, but this the strikers deny. Third Vice-President Webb said he had cabled Mr. Depew about the strike but had not heard from him.

At 6 last night Vice-President Webb made out a schedule of the incoming and outgoing trains on the New York Central road. It showed that nine trains left during the day and that seven arrived. Six Croton locals also ran at irregular intervals.

Train No. 20 of the New York Central, due at 4 o'clock, came into Weehawken on the West Shore road about 4.[illegible]. This was the only New York Central train that came over the West Shore road yesterday, and upon the news of its arrival the strikers declared the West Shore too would be tied up. Not a single freight train left the yards yesterday and none arrived. Mr. Webb said he would make a strenuous effort to run freight trains on Monday, both on the West Shore and New York Central. Many statements are made regarding the number of men on strike. The men themselves said there were three or four hundred out.

The indications now are that the strike on the Vanderbilt lines will not be a success. To-day the regular schedule passenger service of the Hudson River and New York Central and the Harlem roads was resumed, the only change being the consolidating of certain outgoing western trains. The Southwestern limited and the Chicago limited were consolidated and left on the Southwestern's time at 10.30 a.m. The West Shore vestibule limited, which was to have left at 4.50 p.m., was consolidated with the fast western express and left at 6 p.m. The tie-up on the West Shore road, inaugurated last night, did not affect passenger traffic, although the freight business was brought to a standstill. The through Boston trains on the New Haven road left as usual.

The Grand Central depot was thronged with people going out of town. They were detained but a few moments. During the afternoon General Manager Toucey, Assistant Manager Voorhees, John H. Fife, B. A. Loomis, J. J. Loftus, Henry Douglass and John S. Green, the latter five of whom are prominent freight officials of the road, held a conference in the office of Third Vice-President Webb. At its conclusion it was announced that it had been decided to despatch to-morrow all freight trains to their various destinations. A notice posted in the vicinity of the depot directing persons seeking employment of the New York Central & Hudson River Railway to apply at the office of the Wagner Palace Car Company caused applications to be made by the score. By one of the officials it was said 150 men had been taken on, all of whom were experienced railway men.

Mr. Voorhees said he had received a number of applications from railway men living around New York, among whom were some employed on the elevated roads, others from Pittsburg and some from men employed in the Erie yards. Some even came from Chicago. The company had found they could obtain all the men required in this city.

Late this afternoon the following circular was issued by Vice-President Webb, as the result of the long conference held by the railway officials:

"The position of the company is this: We shall select our own men, and we do not propose that they be designated by the Knights of Labor or its committees. When men are dismissed we get rid of the inefficient, the most vicious and those least in accord with our interests. When promotions are to be made we will not be bound by the seniority rules promulgated by the Knights of Labor. A due consideration will always be given to length of service, but the first and most important rule will be the qualification of the men for the place. If our men have grievances the proper officer will be willing to grant hearings and see that consideration is given, but we will not allow outsiders to interfere, or to interfere between the employer and employe."

J. J. Holland and Secretary Hayes of the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor left to-night for Detroit. Before their departure they ordered all the firemen on the Vanderbilt lines here to quit work. At this hour the engines are deserted at the Grand Central depot.

LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS.

The Brotherhood Not Involved and Not Likely to be.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 10.—An effort was made last night by a reporter for the Associated Press to find P. M. Arthur, chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, but that gentleman had gone out of town. Mr. Delos Everett, an officer of the grand division, was seen and said that the officials of the order here knew nothing whatever of the situation in New York. They had no idea there was going to be a strike of any sort. "Our men are not involved, and as far as I know are not likely to be," said Mr. Everett. "We know nothing about the strike except what the newspapers have told us. The engineers have made no complaint and there is not the least likelihood of them joining the strikers. You can say that authoritatively. There is no trouble anywhere in the order. Mr. Arthur went out of town yesterday afternoon to visit his daughter. His absence has nothing whatever to do with business matters. He will be back on Monday. The present strike does not in any way affect our men. Of course, there may be one or two individual instances of the engineers leaving their engines, but they act upon their own responsibility in so doing, and most certainly their action will not be countenanced by the brotherhood. You know, a strike is always the last resort with us, and not until every hope of adjustment was exhausted would there be any danger of a strike.

Notes from the Capital.

OTTAWA, Aug. 9.—The Minister of Marine has received a despatch from British Columbia stating that the salmon run is now on, and is fully equal to last year. Three canneries on Thursday captured the extraordinary number of 20,000 salmon.

The Ottawa Trades and Labor Council have passed a resolution endorsing the action of the Inland Revenue department in compelling cigar vendors to break up their old cigar boxes after using the cigars.

Stewart Henderson, solicitor for Bremner, the Battleford half-breed, saw Sir Adolphe Caron, Minister of Militia, to-day regarding the claim for losses on account of the looting of Bremner's furs during the rebellion. Sir Adolphe said he would officially acknowledge the receipt of the letter, but would delay consideration until the Cabinet reassembles after the holidays.

The United States Crops.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—There is a reduction in condition of all cereals as reported by the statistician of the Department of Agriculture. The decline from July 1 to Aug. 1 is from 93.1 to 73.3 in corn, from 94.4 to 83.2 in spring wheat, from 81.6 to 70.1 in oats, from 88.3 to 82.8 in barley. The condition of buckwheat is 90.1 and of spring rye 88.8. The condition of Irish potatoes is reduced from 91.7 to 77.2.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—The hot, dry weather has had serious effect on the potato crop as well as on grains. Inquiry elicits the information that prices ordinarily ruling for potatoes during the last month have advanced from $2.50 to $2.75 per barrel to $3.25.

Justly Punished.

WALKERTON, Aug. 9.—The other day two young men invited a young woman to get into their buggy near Maple Hill. When she declined one of them jumped out and tried to force her to get in. Her brother appearing on the scene the scoundrels decamped but were chased to Walkerton, taken before the magistrate and summarily mulcted in fine and costs to the tune of $[illegible]

A DAMNABLE CRIME.

A BIGAMIST COMMITS MURDER TO SHIELD HIMSELF.

A Rochester Lather Inveigles His Wife to the Falls and Throws Her Into the River to Prevent Prosecution for the Lesser Crime.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 10.—An atrocious murder has come to light to-day, the principals being Rochester people. This morning Chief Detective J. C. Hayden and Detective Furtherer of Rochester, having in charge a Mrs. Quigley, wife of Charles H. Quigley, a Rochester lather, arrived here and notified Ontario Policeman McMicking that they were in search of the body of a woman who had been murdered here two weeks ago to-day. The victim was the wife of Arthur Day of Rochester and Mrs. Quigley was his sister.

The detectives started on their search, piloted by Mrs. Quigley, down along the top of the river bank on the Canadian side below the railway suspension bridge towards the whirlpool. When about 100 yards below the whirlpool rapids elevator photograph gallery Mrs. Quigley drew back and refused to advance, saying: "There is the spot, under that precipice lies the body of Arthur Day's wife."

Officers Hayden and McMicking then made a detour and after an hour's hard climbing reached the place where the body of the unfortunate woman was found lying frightfully mangled on the ragged rocks. The face was badly sunken, and the whole body was very much decomposed. The hands were over the head. It being late in the evening no attempt was made to bring the body to the top of the bank. Coroner McGarry was notified and ordered the body guarded to-night and brought to the police station at daybreak. The party then returned to Police Magistrate Hill's office, where Mrs. Quigley related this story to the Police Magistrate in the presence of Detectives Hayden, Furtherer, McMicking and your correspondent:

I live at Rochester, N.Y. I came to the Falls Sunday, July 27. With me was my brother, Arthur Day, and his wife. We came by the West Shore via Buffalo, arriving here about 11 o'clock in the morning. The trip was proposed by my brother Arthur on the preceding Saturday. He called at my house and asked me to go to the Falls. I told him I was poor and could not afford it. He told me he would pay my fare. I told him I would go. Upon our arrival at the Falls we took the street cars to the bridge. We crossed the lower bridge to this side and walked down towards the whirlpool.

Below the whirlpool rapids elevator, being tired, I sat down upon a stone looking towards the Falls. My brother and his wife went on down and stopped at the place where we did to-day. I saw my brother once standing near the precipice, his wife immediately in front of him.

The next time I looked he was waving a black handkerchief for me to come to him, which I did, and not seeing his wife I asked him where Deseriah was. He admitted that he had pushed her over the bank and said she had never moved and did not know what struck her. He said he wanted to get rid of her.

Afterwards he gave me a ticket and said we must part. I went up on a street car to the falls and took the train from there. I saw my brother upon arrival at Buffalo, but did not speak to him. I saw him three days afterwards in Rochester. The only thing he said about the murder was that had he to do it over he would not.

Detective Hayden threw the following light upon the murder: Last Tuesday Lizzie Breen of 228 Plymouth-street, Rochester, who had lived comfortably with her father before meeting one Arthur Hoyt of the same city, whom she had married July 13 last at Canandaigua, laid information before me that she had reason to think she had been victimized by Hoyt, that his name was not Hoyt but Arthur Day, and that he was a married man when she met him. He detailed Detective Kavanagh on the case. The detective had Day arrested for bigamy at once and learned upon further investigation that Mrs. Day No. 1, her husband and sister-in-law were at the Falls on July 27, but could not find any trace of Mrs. Day's present whereabouts. Wife No. 2 said that Day would awaken her talking in his sleep by expressions of, "Here she goes over," and like remarks.

Mrs. Quigley being questioned by the detectives about that visit admitted to them her brother had told her at the falls he had pushed her over the bank.

Arthur Day married one Deseriah Chatterton of Saratoga eight years ago and had been living with her at 70 Ellison-street, Rochester, up to the day of the murder July 27, and at the same time had married Lizzie Breen and was living with her at the rear of 89½ Mortimer-street.

Mrs. Quigley is a very hard looking woman and gives her age as 48 years and had been married four times and said that to her mother, Mrs. Cornelia Day, who has rooms in the Sibley block, she has confessed the whole thing. Her mother told her she was glad she was gone. She said her mother did not like Deseriah, in fact she did not like any of her sons' wives and neither did she like any of my husbands, having parted myself and one of my husbands. Upon being asked Mrs. Quigley said the reason for denying any knowledge of Mrs. Day No. 1's whereabouts was that she did not wish to betray her brother in his crime.

The police magistrate had Mrs. Quigley arrested as an accessory to the murder. Upon being told that she could not go she pleaded to Detective Hayden to see that her birds were taken good care of and tears began to flow down her wrinkled cheeks.

The dead woman was tall and slender, with dark hair, fair complexion, dark eyes, rather good-looking. Mrs. Quigley said she was peevish, would take fits of anger. She had two children, one of them dying last winter. She was about 26 years of age. She and her husband had fights when they were living in Monroe-street and parted for a few weeks. The children were put in the industrial school at the time. She was the daughter of Daniel Chatterton of Saratoga.

Wife No. 2 was the daughter of Mr. Breen of Plymouth-street, Rochester. The Breens had come to Rochester from Canada.

Application will be made to extradite Day, and he will be tried for murder here.

Lieut. Stairs at Halifax.

THE ARGENTINE TROUBLES.

AFTER vainly endeavoring to restore confidence and stability to the Argentine Republic, or rather to the city of Buenos Ayres, says the Montreal Gazette, President Celman has studied his own dignity and resigned. It is to be hoped that his disappearance from the seat of authority will have the result which is desired in Europe no less ardently than in America. The course of events during the last few weeks proves unhappily that even so prosperous and apparently so stable a community as that of which President Celman was the duly elected head, is still liable to those sudden disturbances and appeals to violence which have been the bane of free South and Central America. The recent unsettlement in Buenos Ayres will tend to destroy the trust which other states and commercial communities especially had begun to place in the Republic. Three Presidents were permitted to serve out their official terms and until within a month or so the position of Senor Celman, who was elected in August, 1886, and had, therefore, two years more of office before him, seemed quite secure and the country perfectly tranquil. It remains to be seen whether the President's resignation will satisfy the malcontents. Vice-President Pellegrini would, in normal circumstances, take his place, but it is possible that disagreement may arise as to his succession, and the formation of a cabinet satisfactory to those who have driven Celman from power, will be no easy task. The condition of affairs is still precarious, and, in any case, it will be some time before the Republic recovers the confidence which this outbreak of lawlessness has caused it to forfeit. The debt consists of 5 per cent. bonds, $81,544,974; 4½ per cent. deposited by national banks in treasury, $64,949,126; foreign, $67,365,867; floating debt, $10,466,599.

THE BELT SLIPPED.

An Accident in the Dynamo Room at Kemmler's Execution.

ROCHESTER, Aug. 10.—In an interview with a Post-Express reporter Superintendent Barnes revealed some secrets of the dynamo room in Auburn prison. When Kemmler was killed, he said, the belt used was a new one and had not been stretched. The lacing of the belt caused the dynamo to revolve irregularly, and when the current was turned on to kill the resistance of Kemmler and the chair was such that it caused the belt to slip and it came near running off the pulley. It was three-quarters off the pulley and only that a man held a board against the belt would have come off and there would have been an awful scene. There should have been a resistance board to run the current through until they were ready to turn it on to Kemmler and changed from the resistance box by the same move that turned it to him.

FASHION'S FICKLE FANCY.

SOME PROGNOSTICATIONS OF COMING FALL STYLES.

A Forecast Gleaned from the best European and American Sources—What Women Will Wear During the next Month or Two—The Colors and Cuts.

A glimpse into the future, as regards the Fall styles, will doubtless be of interest and profit to our readers, who wish to have an idea of the designs and materials to be in vogue, long before they begin shopping for the coming season. As "Fashion is a fickle jade," she may change in many respects between July and October, but the main ideas will doubtless be as we now give them.

We have gleaned from the best European and American sources our forecast, which is made with a knowledge of the tastes and needs of the American women, who do not accept French or English styles without many original modifications. In the way of colors, brown, tan, mode, grey, clear dark blue, deep rich red, a more purplish heliotrope and old-rose having an almost brownish-lavender cast, are seen in every material. A new brown of a fawnish or castor tint bids fair to be exceeding rare and stylish. Cream of a very deep shade pearl gray ecru, lavender, faint rose-pink, ice blue, and yellow are the chief evening tints.

The black note appears everywhere. Astrakhan, fur, and velvet trimmings and garments will please our luxury-loving tastes. Ostrich feather bands will trim expensive woolen gowns. Scarf effects, or fronts of contrasting goods are among the French novelties, while borders are buried too deep to appear for a time. Rough effects are stylish, and one shall see checks and plaids, both in tartan and novelty mixtures, from a quarter of an inch to fifteen inches square. Expensive woolen goods must present the appearance of a heavy, coarse material, while serges and cashmere cannot be too fine.

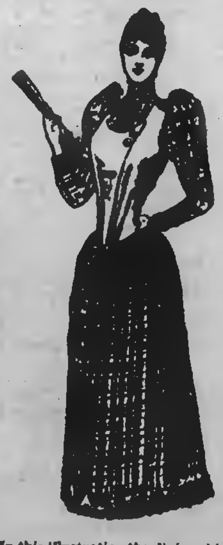
Velvet and silk sleeves relieve any and all costumes from monotony. Combination dress patterns and elegant "robes" show most exquisite embroidery, and grading of shades. That high sleeves will be worn seems a settled fact, though they will not probably scrape as far skyward as many now seen. Flaring collars are advocated by designers for cloaks, jackets, and basques. Fur and cloth shoulder capes will take on a new lease of life. Cloaks that are long, with large hanging or coat-sleeves full at the top, and lapped fronts in Russian style, ulsters having capes, and close-fitting jackets are duly announced.

Tinsel, galloon, piece and ribbon velvet, silk embroideries, some fringes, and fine jet passementerie, crochet and metal buttons, and large and small buckles are offered for trimmings. Bodice designs show pointed and round fronts, drapery over the chest, invisible and visible openings, fancy belts, girdles, and corselets, long and short coat-tail backs, darts and no darts, fewer jacket effects, and some plainly buttoned models for the heavy, rough fabrics. Skirts have long effects, slight panier draperies, a contrasting facing to show when lifting one side, many flat fronts of a most elaborately rimmed scarf-piece, and long aprons lapped to one side. Carriage dresses will drag, but the fashion will not obtain for walking dresses. A frivolous effect is not encouraged in materials, or designs of making. In millinery, feathers and velvet will be the prominent features.

To come down to current events, white embroidered muslin and flannel blouses are made with a pointed yoke, rolling collar, shirred sleeves, and the body portion laid in knife-pleats, with a drawing string in the hem, which holds it to the figure. Muslin waists have the same joined under a row of beading, which gives a pretty and neat finish. One white lawn waist is slightly V-shaped, back and front, with a fulness gathered around the point of the V, and again at the waist-line, with a row of edging turned over around the neck. Dotted linen lawn waists are shirred at the centre of the waist line, front and back, made long enough to tuck below the belt, with rolled collar and cuffs buttonholed in scallops with silk, the color of the figures. Others have the same collar and cuffs, and are tucked, back and front.

We are promised a continued run this coming season for plaids. Here is shown a charming model for one that unites many fashionable features. It is made up the straight way of the material, though the fashionable fad is to cut both novelty and clan patterns on the bias, which brings the seams of the skirt diagonally across, therefore the design must be carefully matched.

Most of the handsome plaids are fifty inches in width, and require five and a half yards for a gown if cut on the straight, or seven and a half yards if cut on the bias, for an English skirt and basque, and two yards of silk or velvet for the full sleeves and collar. If a very careful cutter, a half-yard of the plaid might be saved out of these measurements which, are for an almost straight front and sides and gathered back for the skirt, and a coat tail bodice, having a round or pointed front with or without darts.



In this illustration the lining skirt is faced with plain blue to match the bodice, which has a coat tail back trimmed with buttons and a pointed low-necked front opening on one side, with the dart fullness brought to the point in tiny pleats. The yoke, collar, and full sleeves are of plaid like the skirt, which is cut in scallops on the edge, showing the facing beneath, trimmed with buttons down either side where the front or apron lies over, and has the top caught over the basque point in front; the back is not scalloped and is gathered.

The latest gingham gowns have appeared with a flat front, triple pleated sides, and gathered back, cut on the bias, and hemmed. The basque has a round or pointed front, coat-tail back, and full sleeves, with pear buttons ~~ewing~~ through on the front, sleeves, and coat-tail. Light-colored ginghams, trimmed with velvet ribbon seem out of place, but they are as much worn as those decorated with embroidery.

A white India, figured with heliotrope, has a slightly gathered front, one large box-pleat on each side, and a triple-pleated back. The bodice opens on the left, with the front full at the point, and draped like a jabot at the neck; the skirt fastens up over the back with two velvet rosettes. The very large leg-o'-mutton sleeves, and Medici collar are of heliotrope faille.

Handsome silk costumes for elderly ladies are of faille, or peau de soie, with a vest, and narrow fan-pleated front of green, Suede, or white silk, or mousseline de chiffon; a little fine jet trimming appears on the collar and sleeves. A black lace toilette has a gathered ruffle set on the skirt edge across the front; [illegible] skirt is five yards wide, and ends on the left in a jabot, which shortens it to show the narrow ruffle. The pointed bodice is shirred at the waist-line in the back, is full from the shoulders, and lapped in front, with a frill of lace down the edge. A ribbon around the basque edge ends under a rosette at the left side. A similar rosette and ribbon trims the collar and wrists; the sleeves are of the shirt shape.

FAVORABLE TO FEDERATION.

Justice McMahon's Judgment in the Victoria College Case.

TORONTO, Aug. 11.—Mr. Justice McMahon on Saturday delivered judgment in the suit of the corporation of Cobourg, the subscribers to the endowment, and the fund for the erection of Faraday Hall, etc., and the members of the Senate, plaintiffs, and the Board of Regents Victoria University, defendants. The case was tried at Cobourg without a jury on Nov. 5, 1889; at Toronto, Nov. 12, 1889, and Feb. 28, 1890. The plaintiffs found their claim on the breach of an agreement entered into between the plaintiffs and Victoria College, whereby, as alleged, it was stipulated that the college should be maintained in perpetuity at the town of Cobourg. The learned judge reviews the case at length and cites numerous authorities in support of his finding. He holds that, inasmuch as the subscriptions towards, an endowment fund were general throughout the province, and that what the residents of Cobourg subscribed toward the fund, about $4000, would, of itself, have had very little effect in preventing the closing of the college, the plaintiffs can therefore have no cause of action by reason of any subscriptions made by them to the college endowment fund.

His Lordship further holds that under the purchase by the town of the five acres and its presentation to the college there was no stipulation equivalent to a binding covenant on the part of the defendants that the college shall remain permanently in Cobourg, and does not entitle the plaintiffs to a perpetual injunction against its removal. The gift of the money subscribed for the erection of Faraday Hall must be regarded as conditional upon the college remaining in Cobourg, however, and if removed then the amount subscribed and accepted should be refunded, so that as to this branch of the case, as in that of the acceptance of the land, he considers that adequate compensation can be awarded the plaintiff in damages. He therefore does not consider the injunction should be continued on that ground.

Justice McMahon concurs in the judgment of Chief Justice Galt, that the ratification by the Senate of the action of the Board of Regents was of no effect, since the meeting was held in Toronto instead of in Cobourg. He holds, however, the Board of Regents have power to deal with the question of removal subject to the rights of the plaintiffs, the town of Cobourg, to damages by way of compensation for the five acres of land deeded to the college, and also to the rights of the other plaintiffs and those on whose behalf they sue—subscribers to the Faraday Hall fund—to a return of the amount subscribed and paid thereto.

The injunction restraining the Board of Regents from dealing with the question of removal must be dissolved. The injunction restraining the university from federating continues, however, until a proper meeting has been called and a resolution has been passed based upon a proper vote assenting to the scheme of federation. The plaintiffs have no rights over nor have they any interest in the fund subscribed towards the erection of new university buildings in Toronto, for which purpose alone the subscriptions were obtained by Rev. Dr. Potts.

Scugog Improvements at Lindsay.

For years the Lindsay people have hoped that the day would come when some improvement would be made in the river at the town that would allow of boats running up to the centre of town, instead of unloading passengers at the wharf some distance down the river. An appropriation of $3,000 for the purpose of improving the river was made by the government and to day Mr. R. B. Rogers, Sup't. of the Trent waters, went up to Lindsay to order the commencement of the work. The river will be deepened by dredging from the present wharf up to Wellington-st., and a turning basin will be provided. This will necessitate the appropriation of a part of the shore adjoining and which will have to be removed. The work, when completed, will be a great convenience and will facilitate navigation on the Scugog, though a small stream, carries quite a fleet to and fro on its waters.

ATTEMPTED TRAIN WRECKING.

Ties Piled on the Lakefield Track Saturday Evening.

Dastardly attempts to wreck or damage the Lakefield train were made on Saturday evening, when it was on the way to Lakefield and on the return. There was a large number of passengers on the train on the way up, as is usual on Saturday evening at this season, and when the train was about two miles on this side of Lakefield it approached several ties piled on the track. As the train leaves here before seven o'clock it was not dark at the time and no injury was done. A man was seen near the track at the place and one of the trainmen, thinking he might know something about it, started after him. The man ran, and the train hand after him, but after a short chase the man was caught. He, however, explained his presence and there was no reason to detain him. The obstruction having been removed the train proceeded to the village.

Coming back from Lakefield, for the train only remains there a short time, there was again a good load of passengers, composed chiefly of campers returning from the lakes. When approaching the place where the obstruction had been met on the up run the train slowed up, as it was now getting dark, but its course was not interfered with there. About a mile further on however, was made to throw the train off the track. A rail had been laid across the iron rails and a short distance from that ties had again been placed on the track. The locomotive struck the rail, but as it was light it was shoved along on the rails and did no damage, and before the heavier and more dangerous obstruction was reached the train had been stopped. A number of the passengers alighted and pressed forward to learn the cause of the stoppage, and there was a little excitement when it was learned that another attempt had been made to wreck the train. No one who could be suspected of the crime was visible and after the timber had been removed the train came on Peterborough.

A SECOND ATTEMPT

A sharp watch will be kept on the line, to prevent another attempt of the kind, and it is to be hoped that the perpetrators of the deed will be discovered and punished.

It was only a week previous that a similar attempt was made to wreck a train on the Canadian Pacific near Norwood, which however, was fortunately discovered in time and a disaster averted.

The stock consists principally of the celebrated White Label, and the number of cars that have come to his address these few months past speaks volumes for the ale. d27w31

Ingram, Clark, Wallace, of Toronto, G. M. of Orangemen, B. N. A., also E. F. Clark, Mayor of Toronto. This event will be one of stirring interest to the Order and it is to be hoped that there will be a large attendance. For the Home Circle.

"Bible Readings for the Home Circle" claims nothing as a history of the Bible, or any of its illustrious characters; neither is it a commentary or Bible dictionary. Other works ably and amply cover those phrases of Scripture study; but the late method of research by which the testimony of the different portions of the sacred volume is brought together concerning the subject in hand, is closely followed in the one hundred and sixty-two readings, which, with numerous artistic, emblematic and historic engravings, together with colored plates and diagrams, constitute the complete work. Each Reading is devoted to one of the vital topics of Christianity, enabling the reader to know in brief time what the Bible says concerning it. In the aggregate, they represent the toil and research of many Bible students, and give a priceless aid in solving the query, "What saith the Scriptures?" 1d1w

A SERMON ON ORANGEISM.

Rev. J. H. Locke Addresses the Members of Different Societies.

Yesterday being the Sunday previous to the anniversary of the relief of Derry, commemorated by the 'Prentice Boys, the members of Jubilee Lodge of that order attended divine service at the George-st. Methodist church in the evening and were accompanied by members of other lodges and orders which had accepted their friendly invitation.

The procession was formed at the Orange hall, corner of George and Simcoe-sts., and proceeded to the church in the following order:—

Fire Brigade Band.
Court Little John C.O.F.
L.O.L. No. 49, Peterborough.
L.O.L. No. 80, Peterborough.
Nassau L.O.L.
Royal Black Knights of Ireland.
Juvenile True Blues.
King William Lodge of True Blues.
Jubilee Lodge of 'Prentice Boys.

Although the weather was cool and wet, there was a good turn out and the procession looked well. On arriving at the church the members took possession of the centre row of seats, which had been reserved for them.

THE SERMON.

After the usual devotional exercises and Scripture lesson, Rev. J. H. Locke, the pastor of the church, took his text from Deut. iv., 32:—"Ask now of the days that are past." There were times, he said, when it was the duty of the preacher to go over the past and apply its lessons to the present. It had been said that history was philosophy teaching by experience, and from history they could learn to make the present and future brighter. This was an especially fit time to do so, as they had met to recall the past. As they knew, the name of the Orange society was taken from the Prince of Orange and was assumed in honor of that Prince. James II. of England was intolerant and by his attempts to force the Roman Catholic religion upon the people forced them to look for aid. They appealed to William of Orange, who responded to their appeal and was placed on the throne. Religious liberty was then established and had been handed to them. In Scotland the opposition to William was soon put down, but in Ireland it lasted longer. James fled to France, and with French soldiers landed in Ireland and captured all important points except Enniskellen and Londonderry. Then took place the seige of Derry and the battle of the Boyne. Derry was beseiged by an army of 25,000, while behind its walls were many of the Protestants of the country with but poor guns to man the walls. But the determination of the beseiged turned the seige into a mere blockade. The people suffered from hunger and disease, but refused to surrender, until at last an English vessel came with relief, and the beseigers were driven away. Then William was enabled to leave England, landed in Ireland, and struck the final blow at the Boyne. The preacher sketched the incidents which led up to that battle, and the state and array of both of the armies; followed by a vivid word-picture of the struggle which left William the victor. This battle had far-reaching consequences, he said. It was a critical period. The work of the reformation was in danger of extinction, as the Protestants had been driven out of France by the sword, and the Inquisition was at work. If James had prevailed Protestantism would have been crushed, but William triumphed and saved the nation and preserved their religion. He was a hero to be remembered and honored. The world must not be allowed to forget such men and such events. After and out of these events the Orange order arose. The efforts of the Catholics to regain their lost privileges aroused the fear of Protestants, and secret societies were formed on both sides. At first the Orange society was confined to the poor and illiterate, but the rich united with it and it spread to England and to the colonies, and it was was here. Perhaps in no country was it so active than in Canada, and it was needed here. The final struggle for political and religious freedom had not yet come. There was an influence in Quebec that was felt throughout the Dominion—that was influencing their politics and educational and social institutions. The Roman Catholic church in Canada was aggressive and was actuated by the spirit of the Jesuit. The history of the Jesuits was touched upon, and brief reference made to the Riel matter and the Jesuit Bill, and the Orangemen were called upon to resist the influences of the church and to prevent the establishment of an alien nation in this country. If the Orange society remained true to its principles it would be a source of safety, but if it became a political machine, it would be a danger. Being true to its principles, all right-minded men would wish it God-speed. He closed by asking them to renew their vows of loyalty to their religion and to their country.

At the close of the service the procession re-formed and returned to the Orange hall.

AMONG MASONS.

Sir John and the Grand Master of England.

Not "all at once" is the difference recognized between the travelling bore and the congenial companion that one chances to fall in with on the road, but the old traveller instinctively dreads the one and appreciates the other.

It was one of the latter that told me of a Masonic banquet to Sir John A. Macdonald, and other distinguished Masons, in Washington City, some twenty years ago. My compagnon du voyage spoke with earnest enthusiasm and far more attractively than his expressions reduced to writing will read.

The Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia—with Stansbury as Grand Master, a gentleman pre-eminently fitted for such an occasion—gave the banquet in honor of Lord Ripon, then G.M. of England. Sir John A. Macdonald, a G.M. of Canada, Sir Stafford Northcote and several other equally distinguished foreign Masons. The occasion of so many eminent foreigners was the sessions of the Commission that concluded the treaty of Washington.

My narrator eloquently pictured the grand hall of the Masonic temple, its decorations, beautiful taste in all arrangements; so vivid was his description one would imagine he was speaking of King Hiram's ornaments to the ancient temple. The hundreds of guests, of course all Masons, were statesmen, scholars, members of foreign legations, cabinet officers, governors of the states, and citizens making the gathering a notable and unique one.

It was a treat to hear my friend's running commentary upon many who composed in part this unsurpassed assembly. Of Albert Pike, then as now Soverign Grand Commander of the southern jurisdiction of the Scottish Rite, born on the same day as Gladstone, possessed of such sweet simplicity of manner, so good and genial, one would never realize in his presence the God-endowed genius of the man. A poet whose pathetic songs have caused tears to flow from brave men who knew naught of fear. A scholar and languist whose mss. translations, in faultless penmanship, of ancient classics fill many shelves in the Masonic library. A soldier, true and bold, attested in warfare against the Indians in his south-western home as in the great civil, war as general of Confederate braves. A lawyer, whose volumes of reports (Arkansas) and learning in the technique of the English common law, as well as his graceful oratory, made him foremost at the bar. But the octogenarian, the morals and dogmas of Masonry, with the great truths they inculcate of the Supreme Architect, and His constant work in masonry is to His mind the glory of His life.

It was the Grand Masters of the two kindred countries, England and Canada, represented respectively that night by the then Earl De Grey and Ripon and Sir John A. McDonald, that the "grand honors" were paid. Foreign ministers of continental Europe, and representatives of the isles of the sea, the great and good men from home, were eclipsed that night at the capital of the Republic by these English speaking Masons, one from over the Atlantic, the other just over the border The ovation given them showed the love of Americans for the English tongue, no less than admiration for the men their country had honored, and whom the Masons were now honoring. Lord Ripon's style of speech and manner was thorough English, novel to most of his hearers, delightful to all. His style, as was Lord Northcote's, was different from that in vogue on this side the water, yet, from our standpoint, it lacked nothing to be ranked as true eloquence and the speakers as orators. In presence Northcote was magnificent, while Ripon was diminutive in size and not of pleasing countenance. Both, however, in responding to their toasts, showed, whether by the eloquent repose or graceful action, that their English was of that cultured sort that held spell bound and almost breathless their auditors.

The celebrated Marine Band followed the speakers with "God Save the Queen," and again and again came encores for its repetition, and again and again the band played England's national song. Little dreamt then those loving cousins of the old country that the queen's eldest son was so soon to grasp the gavel of Grand Master of England, and so well and truly to work for and govern the craft.

Then came after them, he, who surely was perferred before them, not in contest, no, nor contrast, but nearer to his auditors, himself an American; Sir John A. Macdonald. The others received an ovation, but what was that to this, from the same audience, in nothing diminished nor in one augmented, an outburst as spontaneous as it was sudden and overwhelming for the moment, only for a moment, for they would not have these brethren from afar to think greater honors were to be rendered one of their own. But, in his approach, easy grace of manner, as he stood eloquent in his repose the audience recognized an American in Sir John. It was the kinship of proximity of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa to the Mississippi and Potomac, that, after the foreigners, the auditors saw before them the manners and bearing of one on this side the Atlantic. It was spasmodic and momentary, then, this greater ovation to Canada's orator. He, too, noticed it and his innate courtesy was about to check it, when suddenly it, through inherent politeness, checked itself and Sir John spoke. If action is oratory and repose eloquence then, indeed, that night, before that cultivated audience, Sir John with eagle beak and eye, with kind and loving utterances, won the hearts of his Masonic brethren.

But not again would that audience allow itself to be guily of seeming rudeness to their other guests, who had brought out such burning words and sentences of fraternal and eternal greeting from over the water. No, they all were too well bred for even the appearance of ill manners but that audience knew its opportunity and honor to again honor Canada's grand man as their brother. When he concluded, with one voice, they called for God Save the Queen; they did not know the words, they tried to guess them, but contented themselves with singing themselves hoarse in harmony with the band, repeating the title with variations. Delicately it was done; doubly, too, was this outburst of honors from an American audience to England's Queen, through her representatives and to Canada's Chieftain and foremost Mason.

So spoke my chance companion of a day on the rails; and as we sped on so his genial, gentle speaking of the banquet which the Duke of Connaught's informal reception in Toronto had recalled.

Your Card.

At present things are made and done
To make life bright for every one.
Your card—this simple little leaf
Will do much work and make it brief;
Besides the common use for all
Will save you letter, note, and call,
If only you will learn by heart
Its etiquette before you start;
And know the letters that are put
Beneath the name—that cracks the nut.
Abbreviated French right there
Is just the password everywhere.
If you will scribble down p. r. (pour remercier)
It means you very thankful are.
Farewell! needs only p. p. c. (pour prendre conge)
A stranger to your home. p. p. (pour presenter)
Congratulation: just p. f. (pour feliciter)
For each good wish that you vouchsafe;
While condolence's sad degree
Is simply made by one p. c. (pour condolence)
And last, one corner deftly bent
Will tell: "I called, sir, at your tent."
You see no labor this will bring
And yet with "chic" it's just the thing.—Tribune.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used by mothers for children teething for over fifty years with perfect success. It relieves the little sufferer at once, produces natural, quiet sleep by freeing the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste, soothes the child, softens the gums, allays pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes Twenty-five cents a bottle.

KNOW HOW —TO— KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

Scugog Improvements at Lindsay.

For years the Lindsay people have hoped that the day would come when some improvement would be made in the river at the town that would allow of boats running up to the centre of town, instead of unloading passengers at the wharf some distance down the river. An appropriation of $3,000 for the purpose of improving the river was made by the goverment and to day Mr. R. B. Rogers, Sup't. of the Trent waters, went up to Lindsay to order the commencement of the work. The river will be deepened by dredging from the present wharf up to Wellington-st., and a turning basin will be provided. This will necessitate the appropriation of a part of the shore adjoining and which will have to be removed. The work, when completed, will be a great convenience and will facilitate navigation on the Scugog, though a small stream, carries quite a fleet to and fro on its waters.

ATTEMPTED TRAIN WRECKING.

Ties Piled on the Lakefield Track Saturday Evening.

Dastardly attempts to wreck or damage the Lakefield train were made on Saturday evening, when it was on the way to Lakefield and on the return. There was a large number of passengers on the train on the way up, as is usual on Saturday evening at this season, and when the train was about two miles on this side of Lakefield it approached several ties piled on the track. As the train leaves here before seven o'clock it was not dark at the time and no injury was done. A man was seen near the track at the place and one of the trainmen, thinking he might know something about it, started after him. The man ran, and the train hand after him, but after a short chase the man was caught. He, however, explained his presence and there was no reason to detain him. The obstruction having been removed the train proceeded to the village.

Coming back from Lakefield, for the train only remains there a short time, there was again a good load of passengers, composed chiefly of campers returning from the lakes. When approaching the place where the obstruction had been met on the up run the train slowed up, as it was now getting dark, but its course was not interfered with there. About a mile further on however, was made to throw the train off the track. A rail had been laid across the iron rails and a short distance from that ties had again been placed on the track. The locomotive struck the rail, but as it was light it was shoved along on the rails and did no damage, and before the heavier and more dangerous obstruction was reached the train had been stopped. A number of the passengers alighted and pressed forward to learn the cause of the stoppage, and there was a little excitement when it was learned that another attempt had been made to wreck the train. No one who could be suspected of the crime was visible and after the timber had been removed the train came on Peterborough.

A SECOND ATTEMPT

A sharp watch will be kept on the line, to prevent another attempt of the kind, and it is to be hoped that the perpetrators of the deed will be discovered and punished.

It was only a week previous that a similar attempt was made to wreck a train on the Canadian Pacific near Norwood, which however, was fortunately discovered in time and a disaster averted.

The stock consists principally of the celebrated White Label, and the number of cars that have come to his address these few months past speaks volumes for the ale. d27w31

For the Home Circle.

"Bible Readings for the Home Circle" claims nothing as a history of the Bible, or any of its illustrious characters; neither is it a commentary or Bible dictionary. Other works ably and amply cover those phrases of Scripture study; but the late method of research by which the testimony of the different portions of the sacred volume is brought together concerning the subject in hand, is closely followed in the one hundred and sixty-two readings, which, with numerous artistic, emblematic and historic engravings, together with colored plates and diagrams, constitute the complete work. Each Reading is devoted to one of the vital topics of Christianity, enabling the reader to know in brief time what the Bible says concerning it. In the aggregate, they represent the toil and research of many Bible students, and give a priceless aid in solving the query, "What saith the Scriptures?" 1d1w

A SERMON ON ORANGEISM.

Rev. J. H. Locke Addresses the Members of Different Societies.

Yesterday being the Sunday previous to the anniversary of the relief of Derry, commemorated by the 'Prentice Boys, the members of Jubilee Lodge of that order attended divine service at the George-st. Methodist church in the evening and were accompanied by members of other lodges and orders which had accepted their friendly invitation.

The procession was formed at the Orange hall, corner of George and Simcoe-sts., and proceeded to the church in the following order:—

Fire Brigade Band.
Court Little John C.O.F.
L.O.L. No. 49, Peterborough.
L.O.L. No. 80, Peterborough.
Nassau L.O.L.
Royal Black Knights of Ireland.
Juvenile True Blues.
King William Lodge of True Blues.
Jubilee Lodge of 'Prentice Boys.

Although the weather was cool and wet, there was a good turn out and the procession looked well. On arriving at the church the members took possession of the centre row of seats, which had been reserved for them.

THE SERMON.

After the usual devotional exercises and Scripture lesson, Rev. J. H. Locke, the pastor of the church, took his text from Deut. iv., 32:—"Ask now of the days that are past." There were times, he said, when it was the duty of the preacher to go over the past and apply its lessons to the present. It had been said that history was philosophy teaching by experience, and from history they could learn to make the present and future brighter. This was an especially fit time to do so, as they had met to recall the past. As they knew, the name of the Orange society was taken from the Prince of Orange and was assumed in honor of that Prince. James II. of England was intolerant and by his attempts to force the Roman Catholic religion upon the people forced them to look for aid. They appealed to William of Orange, who responded to their appeal and was placed on the throne. Religious liberty was then established and had been handed to them. In Scotland the opposition to William was soon put down, but in Ireland it lasted longer. James fled to France, and with French soldiers landed in Ireland and captured all important points except Enniskellen and Londonderry. Then took place the seige of Derry and the battle of the Boyne. Derry was beseiged by an army of 25.000, while behind its walls were many of the Protestants of the country with but poor guns to man the walls. But the determination of the beseiged turned the seige into a mere blockade. The people suffered from hunger and disease, but refused to surrender, until at last an English vessel came with relief, and the beseigers were driven away. Then William was enabled to leave England, landed in Ireland, and struck the final blow at the Boyne. The preacher sketched the incidents which led up to that battle, and the state and array of both of the armies; followed by a vivid word-picture of the struggle which left William the victor. This battle had far-reaching consequences, he said. It was a critical period. The work of the reformation was in danger of extinction, as the Protestants had been driven out of France by the sword, and the Inquisition was at work. If James had prevailed Protestantism would have been crushed, but William triumphed and saved the nation and preserved their religion. He was a hero to be remembered and honored. The world must not be allowed to forget such men and such events. After and out of these events the Orange order arose. The efforts of the Catholics to regain their lost privileges aroused the fear of Protestants, and secret societies were formed on both sides. At first the Orange society was confined to the poor and illiterate, but the rich united with it and it spread to England and to the colonies, and it was was here. Perhaps in no country was it so active than in Canada, and it was needed here. The final struggle for political and religious freedom had not yet come. There was an influence in Quebec that was felt throughout the Dominion—that was influencing their politics and educational and social institutions. The Roman Catholic church in Canada was aggressive and was actuated by the spirit of the Jesuit. The history of the Jesuits was touched upon, and brief reference made to the Riel matter and the Jesuit Bill, and the Orangemen were called upon to resist the influences of the church and to prevent the establishment of an alien nation in this country. If the Orange society remained true to its principles it would be a source of safety, but if it became a political machine, it would be a danger. Being true to its principles, all right-minded men would wish it God-speed. He closed by asking them to renew their vows of loyalty to their religion and to their country.

At the close of the service the procession re-formed and returned to the Orange hall.

AMONG MASONS.

Sir John and the Grand Master of England.

Not "all at once" is the difference recognized between the travelling bore and the congenial companion that one chances to fall in with on the road, but the old traveller instinctively dreads the one and appreciates the other.

It was one of the latter that told me of a Masonic banquet to Sir John A. Macdonald and other distinguished Masons, in Washington City, some twenty years ago. My compagnon de voyage spoke with earnest enthusiasm and far more attractively than his expressions reduced to writing will read.

The Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia—with Stansbury as Grand Master, a gentleman pre-eminently fitted for such an occasion—gave the banquet in honor of Lord Ripon, then G.M. of England. Sir John A. Macdonald, a G.M. of Canada, Sir Stafford Northcote and several other equally distinguished foreign Masons. The occasion of so many eminent foreigners was the sessions of the Commission that concluded the treaty of Washington.

My narrator eloquently pictured the grand hall of the Masonic temple, its decorations, beautiful taste in all arrangements; so vivid was his description one would imagine he was speaking of King Hiram's ornaments to the ancient temple. The hundreds of guests, of course all Masons, were statesmen, scholars, members of foreign legations, cabinet officers, governors of the states, and citizens making the gathering a notable and unique one.

It was a treat to hear my friend's running commentary upon many who composed in part this unsurpassed assembly. Of Albert Pike, then as now Soverign Grand Commander of the southern jurisdiction of the Scottish Rite, born on the same day as Gladstone, possessed of such sweet simplicity of manner, so good and genial, one would never realize in his presence the God-endowed genius of the man. A poet whose pathetic songs have caused tears to flow from brave men who knew naught of fear. A scholar and languist whose mss. translations, in faultless penmanship, of ancient classics fill many shelves in the Masonic library. A soldier, true and bold, attested to warfare against the Indians in his south-western home as in the great civil war as general of Confederate braves. A lawyer, whose volumes of reports (Arkansas) and learning in the technique of the English common law, as well as his graceful oratory, made him foremost at the bar. But the octogeniarian, the morals and dogmas of Masonry, with the great truths they inculcate of the Supreme Architect, and His constant work in masonry is to His mind the glory of His life.

It was the Grand Masters of the two kindred countries, England and Canada, represented respectively that night by the then Earl De Grey and Ripon and Sir John A. McDonald, that the "grand honors" were paid. Foreign ministers of continental Europe, and representatives of the isles of the sea, the great and good men from home, were eclipsed that night at the capital of the Republic by these English-speaking Masons, one from over the Atlantic, the other just over the border The ovation given them showed the love of Americans for the English tongue, no less than admiration for the men their country had honored, and whom the Masons were now honoring. Lord Ripon's style of speech and manner was thorough English, novel to most of his hearers, delightful to all. His style, as was Lord Northcote's, was different from that in vogue on this side the water, yet, from our standpoint, it lacked nothing to be ranked as true eloquence and the speakers as orators. In presence Northcote was magnificent, while Ripon was diminutive in size and not of pleasing countenance. Both, however, in responding to their toasts, showed, whether by the eloquent repose or graceful action, that their English was of that cultured sort that held spell bound and almost breathless their auditors.

The celebrated Marine Band followed the speakers with "God Save the Queen," and again and again came encores for its repetition, and again and again the band played England's national song. Little dreamt then those loving cousins of the old country that the queen's eldest son was so soon to grasp the gavel of Grand Master of England, and so well and truly to work for and govern the craft.

Then came after them, he, who surely was perferred before them, not in contest, no, nor contrast, but nearer to his auditors, himself an American; Sir John A. Macdonald. The others received an ovation, but what was that to this, from the same audience, in nothing diminished nor in one augmented, an outburst as spontaneous as it was sudden and overwhelming for the the moment, only for a moment, for they would not have these brethren from afar to think greater honors were to be rendered one of their own. But, in his approach, easy grace of manner, as he stood eloquent in his repose the audience recognized an American in Sir John. It was the kinship of proximity of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa to the Mississippi and Potomac, that, after the foreigners, the auditors saw before them the manners and bearing of one on this side the Atlantic. It was spasmodic and momentary, then, this greater ovation to Canada's orator. He, too, noticed it and his innate courtesy was about to check it, when suddenly it, through inherent politeness, checked itself and Sir John spoke. If action is oratory and repose eloquence then, indeed, that night, before that cultivated audience, Sir John with eagle beak and eye, with kind and loving utterances, won the hearts of his Masonic brethren.

But not again would that audience allow itself to be guily of seeming rudeness to their other guests, who had brought out such burning words and sentences of fraternal and eternal greeting from over the water. No, they all were too well bred for even the appearance of ill manners but that audience knew its opportunity and honor to again honor Canada's grand man as their brother. When he concluded, with one voice, they called for God Save the Queen; they did not know the words, they tried to guess them, but contented themselves with singing themselves hoarse in harmony with the band, repeating the title with variations. Delicately it was done; doubly, too, was this outburst of honors from an American audience to England's Queen, through her representatives and to Canada's Chieftain and foremost Mason.

So spoke my chance companion of a day on the rails; and as we sped on so his genial, gentle speaking of the banquet which the Duke of Connaught's informal reception in Toronto had recalled.

Your Card.

At present things are made and done
To make life bright for every one,
Your card—this simple little leaf
Will do much work and make it brief;
Besides the common use for all
Will save you letter, note, and call,
If only you will learn by heart
Its etiquette before you start;
And know the letters that are put
Beneath the name—that cracks the nut.
Abbreviated French right there
Is just the password everywhere.
If you will scribble down p. r. (pour remercier)
It means you very thankful are.
Farewell! needs only p. p. c. (pour prendre conge)
A stranger to your home, p. p. (pour presenter)
Congratulation: just p. f. (pour feliciter)
For each good wish that you vouchsafe;
While condolence's sad degree
Is simply made by one p. c. (pour condolence)
And last, one corner deftly bent
Will tell: "I called, sir, at your tent."
You see no labor this will bring
And yet with "chic" it's just the thing.—Tribune.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used by mothers for children teething for over fifty years with perfect success. It relieves the little sufferer at once, produces natural, quiet sleep by freeing the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste, soothes the child, softens the gums, allays pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

KNOW HOW
—TO—
KEEP COOL!

In these cool days that succeed the hot weather of last week and which are to be followed by another heated term—so says the probs—there is opportunity to consider the problem of cool dress. Men try to solve it by wearing the outing shirt and a light coat, discarding the vest altogether. But the warmest part of man's attire is his suspenders They make his shoulders burn, as any one can testify who has taken a long walk on a hot summer day, the clothing near the place where the pressure of the suspenders comes is sure to be soaked with perspiration. And so the man who wears an outing shirt but who will stick to suspenders, has accomplished only half his purpose in keeping cool. Throw aside the suspenders, adopt the belt and summer days will lose half their terrors.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

CHAPTER XII.

Rosalind Valdai and Zenobie were together in their sitting-room, and the former had been weeping. She looked paler than when we saw her before, and her brow was heavy. Smiles no longer crept about the dimples of her cheeks, and eyes had a sad, mournful look. Her face plainly showed that she had suffered much.

"My dear mistress," urged the faithful Zenobie, throwing her arms about Rosalind's neck, and drawing her head upon her bosom, "weep no more. Oh, there must be some hope. Surely God will not suffer such an unholy work to be done."

"Ah, Zenobie," returned the fair maiden, in a fluttering, melancholy tone, "where can I look for hope?"

"I say, in God. You have told me we must look to Him, and I have believed you. Have you not always been good to God?"

"I have been as good as I know how though I have sinned."

"How sinned? Oh, my, mistress, if you have sinned, then who is pure? Tell me."

"We all sin, Zenobie. It is our nature."

"So I have often heard, but I hardly think you have sinned. What have you done which you knew to be wrong?"

"Nothing—nothing."

"Then how have you sinned?"

"Ah, Zenobie, we all do things which we ought not to do; but yet I mean to do as near right as I can."

"Then leave the rest with God. Oh, when poor mortals do as near right as lies in their power, surely they may leave the rest without fear. And now, if God is just, as you tell me, why should He allow the wicked duke to triumph over you? What justice would there be in that—when you are all goodness, and he is sin itself?"

Rosalind was puzzled. She had tried to teach her attendant to love and honor God, and she had so far succeeded that Zenobie understood all the principles of Christianity, and embraced them gladly and joyfully; but now how should she make this point understood? How should she reconcile, this apparent injustice with God's universal mercy and justice?

"Can you not tell me?" the young girl asked again. "Why should God allow such a thing? You say He is all-powerful, and can do what He wills."

"Zenobie," returned the maiden, after pondering for a while, "you do not look a the subject in a proper light. God does not operate by petty, individual decisions, as an emperor does. He sees that certain laws are necessary for the good of mankind—and not a single law of all his code is there but is very good. Last night your head ached, and you suffered; and of course you had violated some natural law. It was your own fault. And so this suffering which is now come upon me is the result of a violation of one of God's laws."

"Ah," cried Zenobie, eagerly, "but you are the one who suffers, while another violates the law. In my case I did both, and do not complain."

"But listen:" pursued Rosalind, with a brightening countenance, for the true idea had come to her mind. "It would not be just for a person to enjoy all the good of a law and leave others to suffer all the evil. God has established in us a social nature, and through that part of our nature come the sweetness of our earthly enjoyments. Such a law, the law of sociality—must be universal, and if men break that law they must suffer, and the only just way in which God could shield me from suffering would be to release me from the effects of the law. Then I should be a poor, lonesome outcast, forced to live all the days alone like a barren rock upon the top of some bleak mountains. But I would rather live among people, and enjoy the companionship of my fellows. I have accepted the boon, and now, when its evils come, I must suffer. Had God's intent been followed out there would have been no suffering. It is not His fault that the duke sins. Do you understand?"

"I don't know," murmured the young girl dubiously.

"But see," resumed Rosalind; "you choose to exercise your social nature, and of your accord you mingle among your fellows. Do you not see that thus you are enjoying one of God's richest blessings—the blessing of sociality, friendship, and love?"

"Yes—I see."

"Well, so far God is good in having given you that power for such enjoyment?"

"Yes—I see."

"Well, now, under that law, when I found a friend in the duke, and here have found a home. But circumstances have changed. The duke has become wicked in thought—he wants more money—and he will prostitute a power which, in obeyance of God's law would be good, to my ruin. Now God can not save me without rending to pieces one of His most powerful laws, and one which is meant for a universal good. The moment He does that He destroys that principle of human dependence whence flow those most holy virtues of love, friendship, and charity. He must act by universal laws, and not by partial rules and individual exceptions. So as long as I can enjoy the blessings of social life, I must be subject to the evils of treachery and social wickedness. Do you not understand now?"

"I see—I see," the girl murmured thoughtfully.

"Aye, Zenobie," the mistress added, while a holy light shone upon her countenance. "God has made us subject to His laws; but look beyond the grave, and how bright is it with hope! I have a father and a mother there. Oh, in all my misery—even in the worst state to which the bad duke can reduce me, I would not change places with him. You seemed to intimate that God would see me suffer, and yet let the duke triumph. Triumph! Oh, Zenobie, for what would you know that man's heart in your bosom, and his soul in your keeping?"

"I would rather die!" the girl cried, while a cold shudder ran through her frame.

"Then you see he does not go clear. Oh, how blind and simple are those who imagine there can be pleasure in sin!"

This opened a new theme to Zenobie's mind, and she pondered upon it a long while. But by and by she came back to the theme from whence they had started; and in pursuance thereof she said:

"My mistress, are you sure the duke will persist in this?"

"Aye, Zenobie; I know he will," Rosalind answered, while the old shudder came back to her frame, and the old grief to her soul.

"And have you no hope?"

"Only one—in Ruric. He may help me."

"Oh, I hope he can. He is a noble man."

Rosalind answered with a look of gratitude, and Zenobie proceeded:

"Where is the titled lord more noble than he? Oh, were I to choose a husband now and he was free, and I was in your position, I'd choose Ruric Nevel before all the emperors of earth."

"So would I," returned the fair maiden.

"If I were a countess, as you are, oh, how I should love to make such a man a count.

	£5,750,000 or $27,983,333 34

The share capital is divided into 200,000 six per cent. preference shares (cumulative) of £10 each—£2,000,000 or $9,733,333.34, and 175,000 ordinary shares of £10 each—£1,750,000 or $8,516,666.66.

One-third of each class of security, being the largest proportion allowed by the rules of the London Stock Exchange, will be taken by the vendors in part payment of the purchase consideration.

The debenture stock will be transferable when fully paid in multiples of £10, and will be secured by mortgage as within mentioned in favor of the trustees for the debenture stockholders, viz., The Debenture Corporation (limited).

Interest thereon will be paid half-yearly on the 1st January and the 1st July in each year, the first payment being made on 1st January, 1891, on the amounts as paid up.

The debenture stock will be issued as perpetual stock, but the company reserves the right to pay off the whole issue at £110 per cent. at any time after 1st of January, 1901, and to pay off any part of the issue at any time after the same date at the same rate by drawings.

The preference shares will be entitled from and after 1st January, 1891, to a cumulative preferential dividend of six per cent. per annum, payable out of the profits of the company, and will also be entitled to rank on the property and assets of the company in preference to the ordinary shares.

Until 31st December, 1890, both preference and ordinary shares will only be entitled to interest at five per cent. per annum, payable out of the profits of the company, and calculated from the dates of allotment and of the payments of the instalments, but from and after 1st January, 1891, they will rank for dividend in the usual way.

None of the capital offered has been underwritten or guaranteed, but is offered unreservedly to the public.

The allotment will be made as early as possible after the subscription is closed, and in cases where it is not practicable to make any allotment the amount deposited on application will be returned as soon as possible.

The failure to pay any instalment when due will render all previous payments liable to forfeiture.

Directors and members of the existing private unlimited company who are the vendors as mentioned above.

This company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and working the well-known and valuable cotton thread business of Messrs. J. & P. Coats at Paisley in Scotland, at Pawtucket, Rhode Island, in the United States of America, and elsewhere, as a going concern. The business was originally founded at Paisley in 1830 and in America in 1868, and was carried on as a private firm till 1884, when it was converted into a private unlimited company, the whole of the shares belonging to the Messrs. Coats. It has now attained such proportions (having become one of the largest manufacturing concerns in the world) and the prospect of its further growth is such that the vendors have determined to convert it into a public company.

The Messrs. Coats, whose names appear as directors, have managed the business for many years, and they have agreed that at least four of their number will be on the board of the new company for a period of five years from the date of its incorporation. Mr. Archibald Coats will accept the chairmanship and the company will also have the benefit of the services of Mr. Philippi as director (he having managed the foreign trade for upwards of ten years), so that the continuity of the policy hitherto pursued is insured.

The land covered by the works at Paisley and Pawtucket and available for further extension comprises upwards of 120 acres, entirely freehold and subject only to few duties, amounting to £118 per annum. The buildings have been enlarged and increased from time to time to meet the requirements of the business in each country; they are of the most substantial and improved description and are probably unsurpassed by the works of any other manufacturing establishment.

The works at Paisley to be transferred to the new company are the absolute property of the vendors. The works at Pawtucket are vested in the Conant Thread Co., which is incorporated under the laws of the State of Rhode Island. The shares of this company are almost entirely held by or on behalf of the vendors, and Mr. James Coats is the president of the company. The mills in America were erected at various dates between 1870 and 1889, and the whole processes of manufacture are carried on therein, and the capacity of the establishment is equal to the large American trade of the firm.

The steam engines in the various mills at Paisley and Pawtucket give an aggregate of upwards of 17,000 indicated horse-power, and the machinery and plant embrace every appliance of the best and most modern description. The total number of hands employed is over 6000.

Upon the land at Paisley are commodious dining halls for the work people, a school, also numerous dwelling houses and recreation grounds.

A siding of the Glasgow & Southwestern Railway affords communication with the entire railway system of the United Kingdom, and most valuable rights to the supply of pure water for the bleach works are secured by the Paisley Waterworks Acts, 1835, 1864, 1866.

The mills, plant and machinery at Paisley and Pawtucket have been inspected and reported upon as follows, viz.:

11 Billiter-square, London, E.C., July 23, 1890.

DEAR SIRS,—Ferguslie Mills—Pursuant to your instructions we have attended at these mills at Paisley and have made careful inspection of the various mills, buildings, fixed plant, machinery, engines and boilers, etc., with a view to advising you as to their present condition. The plant is of a most costly description, and, for the greater part, of modern type, and includes not only all the latest improvements for the economical working of the business, but there are also special machines of the firm's own manufacture, for which they hold letters patent. The buildings are of the most substantial character and admirably adapted for the purposes for which they were erected, and it may be generally stated that, both as regards arrangement of mill buildings and the laying down of the machinery, the plans, which can only have originated from experience, have been followed up with one idea of thoroughness without regard to cost. In conclusion we may say that, notwithstanding our large and varied experience in machinery, it has never been our lot to survey a mill so admirably designed, so well executed and so carefully kept and maintained. We are, dear sirs, yours faithfully,

The Undersigned, Wm. B. Whiting, vice-president, from personal inspection, and Edward Atkinson, president, from knowledge derived from the constant supervision of the reports and inspections made by Mr. Whiting and other experts thereto appointed, hereby certify that the mills, plant and machinery of the Conant Thread Co. of Pawtucket, R.I., are in good repair and are in the highest state of efficiency.

To Messrs. Coats, Son & Co., 99 Gresham-st., London.

In addition to the works above mentioned the vendors are interested in works now in course of construction in Russia and also in a small factory at Montreal.

All the interests of the vendors in America, Canada and Russia will pass to the new company.

Messrs. Turquand, Youngs & Co., chartered accountants of London, have given the following certificate with reference to the profits of the business:

41 Coleman-street, London, E.C., Aug. 5, 1890.

Messrs. Coats, Son & Co.:

Gentlemen,—We have examined the statement of profits submitted to us by Messrs. J. & P. Coats, and compared it with their books at Paisley, and, after making certain readjustments, find that without charging interest on capital or borrowed money, rent in respect of freeholds or subscriptions and donations, but after deducting the few duties and providing for depreciation, the profits of their business carried on at home and abroad during the seven years ended 31st December, 1889, including dividends, except as mentioned below, received during that period on shares held by or on behalf of Messrs. Coats in the Conant Thread Co., and their share of profits from the Canada Thread Co., were £2,982,340 16s. 8d., averaging as follows:

Approximate average of the last seven years	£426,048 13s 8d per annum
Approximate average of the last five years	425,346 0 10 per annum
Approximate average of the last three years	457,719 8 8 per annum
Amount for the year 1889	474,773 0 10 per annum

subject to the following remarks:

(1) That in addition to the profits above-mentioned, Messrs. Coats have carried to the credit of a renewal fund and invested a special dividend of £108,434 8s 1d, and also portions of other dividends received during the seven years from the Conant Thread Company, and these with accumulations now amount to £301,621 2s 9d, of which only £30,804 3s 9d has been written back and treated as profit.

(2) That during the above period the sum of £208,647 11s 4d was expended in the erection of a spinning mill at Paisley, completed in 1888. Messrs. Coats wrote off £144,487 4s 9d of the above amount of profits, but in preparing their statement of the profits of the above period they have written back that sum and it is included in the above total of £2,982,340 16s 8d. The reason assigned to us by Messrs. Coats for this is that having erected a mill in a style and of materials much superior to those usually employed for such a purpose, they determined, as a private company, to write down the cost to a low and arbitrary figure out of their profits, but contend that the actual profits made should not be reduced thereby, a contention which does not appear to us to be at all unreasonable. Messrs. Coats further state that in the future the cost of the maintenance of this mill will stand at a minimum as compared with that of other mills; and an inspection of the building in question confirms this view. Besides the above, Messrs. Coats wrote off £25,968 14s 1d in respect of the machinery in the new mill and a school erected about the same time, which sum has not been written back.

(3) That as regards the question of depreciation in respect of the buildings, plant and machinery belonging to Messrs. J. & P. Coats, at Paisley, so far as we are competent to judge from the materials placed before us, we are of opinion that sufficient provision has been made in the accounts.

(4) That no allowance to any partner for management in Scotland is charged in the accounts, but a special allowance of £3000 per annum and taxes has been made to one of the partners residing in America.

(Signed)
TURQUAND, YOUNGS, WEISE, BISHOP & CLARKE.

The annual interest on £2,000,000 debenture stock at 4½ per cent. will require £90,000.

The annual dividend on £2,000,000 preference shares at 6 per cent. will require £120,000.

A dividend of say 8 per cent. on £1,750,000 ordinary shares will absorb about £140,000.

Together £350,000.

The above averages show that the business is a progressive one, and it will be seen that even if the profits do not exceed the average of the last seven years there will be a surplus of £70,000 available for Reserve Fund or further dividends, and should the profits equal or exceed those of 1889 this surplus will be increased to upwards of £124,000. Before arriving at the above averages of profits there have been deducted certain percentages and allowances in connection with the American business which have amounted during the last seven years on an average to £18,000 per annum. Under the contract the vendors undertake to relieve the company of all these payments in future, which should more than cover any additional cost of direction, etc. The company takes over the business and profits as from 1st July, 1890, with the benefit of and subject to all current contracts, and pays interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from that date on that portion of the purchase money which is payable in cash. The stock in trade of the vendors, consisting of wholly and partly manufactured stock and raw material, is estimated by them to have amounted, on the 30th June, 1890, to upwards of £960,000. The vendors believe that this amount of stock is fully sufficient for the working of the business, and that with the cash mentioned below it will constitute an ample working capital. They guarantee that the stock to be handed over to the company shall amount to at least £900,000, and undertake that if when the stocktaking on 30th June last has been completed there should be any deficiency in that sum they will pay the same to the company in cash. They also undertake to hand over to the company in cash £400,000, making, with the stock, £1,360,000. The company will not take over any of the liabilities or book debts of the vendors, but the debts owing to or by them will be collected and discharged on their account through the company in such a manner as to avoid interference with the ordinary trade arrangements with customers and connections. The price to be paid to the vendors for the business, good will, properties, trade marks, machinery and utensils, shares in the American and Canadian companies, the interests of the vendors in Russia, and the above mentioned stock and cash, is £5,750,000, which will be paid as follows:

In 58,333 fully paid ordinary shares	£583,330
In 66,666 fully paid 6 per cent. preference shares	666,660
In debenture stock	666,660
And in cash	3,833,350
Total	£5,750,000

Being one-third of each issue and the largest amount permitted by the rules of the London Stock Exchange.

The agreement for the purchase of the business is dated the 31st day of July, 1890, and is made between J. & P. Coats of the first part; James Coats (residing at Providence, in the United States of America), James Coats, jun., Archibald Coats, George Coats (Belleisle, Ayrshire), Daniel Coats, William Allan Coats, George Coats (Garthland Place, Paisley), Andrew Coats, Peter Mackenzie Coats, William Hodge Coats and Stuart Auchincloss Coats (residing at Providence aforesaid), all thread manufacturers in Paisley, and being the whole of the present shareholders of the old company, of the second part; and William Pollok Stewart, on behalf of this company, of the third part. The said agreement has been confirmed by an agreement dated the 6th August, 1890, and made between the same parties as the mentioned agreement of the first three parts, and the company of the fourth part. Copies of these contracts of the memorandum and articles of association may be seen at the offices of the company in Paisley; of its solicitors in London and Paisley; at the Bank of the Manhattan Company in New York, and at the Bank of Montreal, Montreal, Canada. Besides these agreements there are also contracts and agreements too numerous to specify made by the vendors in the course of their business; also an agreement with Messrs. Coats, Son & Co., 5th day of August, 1890, with reference to making this issue. The vendors (who are the promoters of this company) out of the purchase money pay all expenses up to allotment; also all stamps and expenses of the transfer to the company and the execution of the trust deed and debenture stock certificates, and all subscribers for shares and debenture stock will be deemed to have accepted the information given in this prospectus as full and sufficient notice, and particulars of such contracts as are above specified or referred to, and to have waived all right to any further notice or particulars thereof, whether under section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise.

As security for the debenture stock, the various heritable properties in Scotland and the shares and other assets in foreign countries will, so far as is consistent with the due conduct of the business and with the laws of those countries, be transferred to the debenture corporation, limited, as trustees for the debenture stockholders upon the terms of trust deed, the form of which, with the form of debenture stock certificate, can be seen at the offices of the solicitors in London and Paisley, and at New York and Montreal as above. The statements in this prospectus as to the properties and business are made upon the authority of and information furnished by the vendors. If the number of shares or debentures allotted is less than the number applied for, the surplus deposit will be credited in reduction of the amount payable on allotment. It is intended to make early application for a quotation for the shares and debenture stock on the London and Provincial Stock Exchanges.

MRS. QUIGLEY'S STORY.

REPEATED BEFORE CORONER AND POLICE MAGISTRATE.

She Saw a Vision and It Forced Her to Reveal the Truth—Day Pleads Not Guilty, but is Committed for Wilful Murder.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 11.—This morning Coroner McGarry had the body of Mrs. Deseriah Day, who Mrs. Quigley claims was shoved over the precipice near Whirlpool Rapids Park Sunday, July 27, by her husband, placed in a coffin, which was lowered over the precipice by a derrick for the purpose. The body was lying across a log and in a much decomposed condition. The clothing was badly torn, and near by was a hat, which had evidently fallen from the head. When the men at the top of the cliff began to raise the coffin a young man named Rudd, who had been assisting to place the body in the coffin, got his hand caught in the rope around the coffin and was drawn to the top of the cliff, 70 feet.

The body, after being identified by Mrs. Quigley, was interred in Drummond Hill Cemetery. The coroner's jury, after hearing the evidence of Mrs. Quigley, which differed in no material respect from her statement to Police Magistrate Hill previously published, returned a verdict that deceased met her death by the hands of her husband by shoving her over the bank.

At 3 o'clock this afternoon Detective Furtherer arrived in town with Arthur Hoyle Day, who had been arrested in Rochester for bigamy and did not know a charge of murder was hanging over him. The officers told him that the body of a woman had been found at Niagara Falls which was supposed to be that of his wife Deseriah, and they wanted him to come and identify her. When shown the clothing of the dead woman he said he did not know it as that of his wife. He has kept very cool and is another Burchell in nerve. He said his wife wore a black dress but not like that one. He was then arrested by the Canadian police on a charge of murder. The prisoner was brought before Police Magistrate Hill for a preliminary hearing. The accused pleaded not guilty.

Mrs. Quigley was the first witness. She repeated the story which she had told twice before. She said that she first disclosed the fact that Day pushed his wife over the bank yesterday and that she did it then because as she neared the scene of the crime she saw a vision. "A black mist rose from the place," said the witness, "and I told."

The prisoner was asked if he had any questions to ask Mrs. Quigley. He hesitated and then said;

Q. How many feet did you say you were away? A.—I don't know how many.

Q. Didn't you tell the judge three or four hundred feet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it three or four hundred feet or five steps?—A. I can't say but it was quite a piece.

Q. Ten steps or twenty rods?—A. Just as I have stated, it is just so.

Q. Did you go up a hill with us?—A. Up as far as a post I said, and she wanted to go to the whirlpool. If I had known your intention I would have never come.

Q. How long were we away from you?—A. Maybe 25 or 30 minutes.

Q. Do you positively swear I waved my handkerchief to you?—A. I do. You needn't try to criminate me. You are like the rest of my brothers, you have got us all in trouble and now you try to mix me up in this affair.

The witness at this stage burst into tears. Her brother, continuing, said:

Q. What conversation did you say passed between us?—A. Didn't you say you pushed her over?

Q. No, I did not. Would you swear I pushed her over?—A. No, I will not swear whether she slipped over or was pushed over, but I will swear you said you pushed her over.

Q. Were we good natured that day or not?—A. As far as I saw, you were good natured.

Q. Where you took dinner did anyone know her?—A. Yes.

Q. How did they get acquainted?—A. I don't know. She was trying to get her dinner for less than 50 cents.

Q. Did she say anything about them giving her $2?—A. She did not.

Q. Did she try to pick berries off the bank at the time?—A. I could not tell. She was pretty close to the bank. We picked both red and black berries along the bank.

Q. Did you ever hear anyone say she was going to commit suicide?—A. Yes, I have.

Q. How long ago?—A. Last Saturday.

Q. Who were the parties that told you?—A. Mrs. Jennings. She told it several times.

Q. Did you ever hear it said that she said if she killed herself she would leave a note behind to bring me in for it?—A. I think I have.

Q. You never heard me say I had such a thing in my mind, did you?—A. I never did.

Q. Will you say whether she slipped over or was pushed over?—A. I will not, for I did not see it.

Q. She always seemed to have a good time, did she not?—A. She did.

To Magistrate Hill: He did not claim at the time that she slipped over. He said he shoved her over.

That concluded Mrs. Quigley's evidence. Detective Furtherer and Chief of Police Young gave their evidence as to investigating the case, finding the body and the identification of the clothing by Mrs. Quigley. After hearing the evidence the magistrate committed Day to Welland jail to stand his trial there at the assizes to be held in October.

Mrs. Quigley was remanded for eight days while her case as an accessory before and after the crime is being looked into.

THIRTEEN PERSONS KILLED AT CREFELD IN A STORM.

Over a Score of Others Injured—The Mutiny at Chatham Renewed—Rebel Arabs Toast a Captive's Flesh and Force Him to Eat It.

BERLIN, Aug. 11.—During a heavy storm at Crefeld to-day a house containing 50 persons fell to the ground. Thirteen were killed, 20 more or less injured were rescued and 12 are still buried in the wreck. Efforts are being made to extricate those who are in the ruins, cries for help from some of whom are audible.

Crefeld is in Rhenish Prussia 12 miles from Dusseldorf, and is the principal seat of silk and velvet manufacture in the Kingdom. Its population is about 60,000. The ancient fortifications of the city are still standing.

Thirteen Persons Drowned.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The British steamer Halcyon collided with the British steamer Rheubina to-day near Vigo, Spain. The Halcyon sank. Thirteen persons were drowned.

Tortured by Arab Fiends.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—An engagement has taken place between a force of rebel Arabs, and the army of the Sultan of Morocco. One hundred and twenty prisoners were captured by the rebels, and were all massacred. Among the captives was the son of the governor of the province in which the rising took place. Portions of his body were cut off while he was alive, and toasted. He was then compelled by Altinal, the leader of the rebels, to eat his own flesh.

The Chatham Mutiny Renewed.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Further trouble has occurred among the troops at Chatham. A few days ago the harness of the horses belonging to the artillery battery there were so badly cut and damaged by some of the members of the battery that it was necessary to abandon a proposed parade of the battery. To-day it was discovered that the harnesses had again been hacked and cut in such a manner as to render them entirely useless. Three of the artillerymen who were the leaders in the mutiny have deserted.

England and the Vatican.

ROME, Aug. 11.—The English Government has informed Cardinal Rampolla, Papal Secretary of State, that it is impossible for England to receive a papal envoy or to send a minister to the Vatican. It has been suggested that a secretary be attached to the British legation at Vienna, whose duty should be to conduct negotiations with the Vatican and to sometimes visit Rome.

The Ameer at Cabul.

CABUL, Aug. 11.—The Ameer of Afghanistan arrived here to-day and was given an enthusiastic reception. A deputation comprising the principal chiefs, citizens and military officers presented him with 60,000 rupees to be devoted to charity. Several rebel Alihazara sheikhs were taken before the Ameer, who dismissed them after exhorting them to endeavor to persuade their tribes to respect their allegiance.

Duke of Heligoland.

BERLIN, Aug. 11.—Emperor William arrived in Berlin to-day. He will create Prince Eitel Frederick, his second son, Duke of Heligoland.

TRADE AND TRAFFIC.

Leading Features of the Grain and Produce Markets at Home and Abroad.

TORONTO, Aug. 12.—The produce market is quiet. Eggs are quoted at 14c to 16c, tub butter 13c to 15c, rolls 17c, lard $9 to $10, pork $6.50 to $7, geese 6c to 7c, turkeys 13c to 15c, ducks 60c to $1 per pair, chickens 60c to 90c, potatoes $2.25 to $2.50 per barrel, apples 60c to $1 per basket, hay $7 to $9, straw $6 to $7.

BREADSTUFFS.

Flour—Still unchanged, and no demand is yet heard here. The American wheat markets are going up right along, but for some inexplicable reason these do not seem to affect dealers or millers here. Straight roller is quoted at $4.50 to $4.60, and extra at $4.25 to $4.40.

Bran—Fair demand and prices firm; $10 to $10.50 outside, and $11.50 on the track here.

Wheat—A quiet market prevails, there being little demand. Red and white are offering at 92c, and spring on the Midland at 90c.

Oats—The market is dull, and no change in prices. White, outside, has been sold at 44c.

BEERBOHM'S REPORT.

Beerbohm reports: Floating cargoes—Wheat steady, corn nil. Cargoes on passage—Wheat steadier, corn quiet. Mark Lane—Wheat, corn and flour a turn dearer: spot good Danube corn 19s 9d, was 19s 3d; prompt 19s 9d, was 19s 6d; ditto mixed American corn 20s 3d, was 19s 6d; straight Minn. flour 26s, was 26s. French country markets firm. Weather in England showery. India shipments of wheat to United Kingdom 20,000 qrs., to Continent 40,000 qrs. Liverpool—Spot wheat moderate demand, corn moderate demand, 4s 3d, ½d cheaper.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

Liverpool reports: Wheat firm, demand poor; holders offer sparingly. Corn firm, demand improving. Spring wheat, 7s 3½d to 7s 4d; red winter, 7s 3d to 7s 3½d; No. 1 California, 7s 4½d to 7s 5d. Corn, 4s 3d. Peas, 5s 5½d. Pork, 54s. Lard, 31s 3d. Bacon, long clear heavy, 30s; light, 31s; short clear, 31s. Tallow, 24s 3d. Cheese, 40s.

CHEESE MARKETS.

Utica reports: The attendance on the Board of Trade was light, and at 5 p.m. the room looked as if a cyclone had struck and scattered the salesmen, and in fact it had, in the way of the Central strike. The Central and West Shore having refused to ship cheese, buyers using those lines refused to buy and advised their patrons to hold. When these facts became known the salesmen left for home a much demoralized set of men, and at 6½ p.m. the market was closed for the day. The cheese that was bought will be shipped over the D., L. & W. or the Ontario & Western to New York. The coming week will undoubtedly show very light shipments, and at the same time demonstrate to salesmen what they may expect as to the future of the market. If lack of transportation and light shipments do not tend to send the prices to a higher figure the outlook for the future will not be very encouraging. Some of the best factories refused to sell at the ruling figures. The ruling price was 7c, ⅛c below last week. Transactions were: 5 lots, 500 boxes, 6⅞c; 44 lots, 4462 boxes, 7c; 9 lots, 1035 boxes, 7⅛c; 27 lots, 1981 boxes, 7¼c; 16 lots, 584 boxes, on commission. Total 101 lots, 9562 boxes; ruling price 7c. Transactions same date last year aggregated 17,988 boxes, ruling price 8c.

Rejoicing Over Celman's Downfall.

BUENOS AYRES, Aug. 11.—Sixty thousand persons attended the mass meetings held here to-day to rejoice over the fall of President Celman. General Mitre was cheered as the future candidate for the presidency.

SUICIDE AT VERDUN.

A Female Lunatic at the Asylum Takes a Fatal Dose.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—One of the female patients of the new Protestant insane asylum at Verdun committed suicide by swallowing a quantity of carbolic acid. Coroner Jones has decided to hold an inquest, and has delegated High Constable Bissonnette to summon a jury. The name of the woman was Jessie Campbell. She was about 34 years of age, married, and the mother of three children. She was a pay patient and one of the first to enter the hospital, having come from Howick. She had been suffering from melancholia, with an inclination to commit suicide, and every possible preventive measure was taken in her case. She was not even allowed to sleep alone. She occupied one of the rooms on the second floor in the part set apart for female pay patients, and a couple of doors from here was the room of Miss Dance, the nurse who had charge of the department. Among the contents of the latter's room was a bottle partially filled with carbolic acid, which she had used for disinfecting purposes. A little before 8 o'clock she left her room to get some clean towels, not being absent more than two or three minutes, but she forgot to lock her door. When she returned she found Mrs. Campbell lying on the floor moaning and partially unconscious. Dr. Burgess, the medical superintendent, was immediately called upstairs, and thinking the woman in a fit hurried to his office to procure some medicine, when Miss Dance came running after him and told him that she had found out the real cause of the woman's illness. She had noticed that the bottle of acid was missing from the place where she had put it, and found it almost empty. A hurried examination of the patient's mouth and throat showed she had swallowed the poison, and though everything possible was done to save and revive her, she died in about twenty minutes, the effect of an internal application of carbolic acid being an almost immediate collapse of the heart. Judging from the quantity that was in the bottle when last used and the little that remained, she could not have taken more than two tablespoonfuls, which would constitute about an ounce of the deadly stuff.

A Fatal Stolen Ride.

STRATFORD, Aug. 11.—William Jacoby, a 14-year-old boy of this city, who has been in the employ of Dr. Niemur of Tavistock for some time, was struck by a freight train last Saturday evening and died from the effects of his injuries this morning. He with some other boys had been in the habit of jumping on freight trains as they entered and left the station. Last Saturday evening he boarded a freight train and rode on the cow catcher as far as the Ætna flour mills. He attempted to get on again upon its return, but failed, and was crushed between the train and the platform. Mr. T. Flynn, of the mills, found him a few minutes later lying on the track with his face bathed in blood. He was carried to Dr. Niemur's and carefully attended, but died this morning.

Blinded by Firecrackers.

CHATHAM, Aug. 11.—A few days ago a youth named Harry Mahler, who was fooling with firecrackers, injured the eye of a little boy named Chants so that the sight was destroyed and the other eye has since gone blind through sympathy. Mahler was arrested on a charge of malicious assault, but as there was no evidence of malice he was allowed to go.

The 3-year-old son of Joseph Walker, 4th con., Harwich, was found in a field with a bad cut 1½ inches long and half an inch deep in his neck. He was nearly dead from loss of blood. A child a little older was with him at the time. The wound was caused by a hoe, but whether the little fellow fell on it or was struck accidentally is not known.

Another Steamer Ashore.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—The steamship Mondego is aground 20 miles down the river at Isle des Lauriers, opposite Varennes. She ran aground early yesterday morning, and Messrs. Reford & Co., her agents, state that the accident was caused by her steering gear getting out of order. Two steam tugs and two lighters are at work alongside her, and the company hope that she will be got off all right. She was outward bound and is loaded with cattle and other freight. People say who have seen her that her bow is nearly clear out of water, and her chances of safety are small. The river is acquiring a bad notoriety this season through steamships running aground.

Mr. Wiman Will Orate.

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—The Sons of St. George, which is an English organization of workingmen of enormous proportions, hold their annual celebration at Jones' Wood in this city on Wednesday next. R. J. Cortis, late of the White Star Line and now of the Hamburg Line, presides, he being one of the largest employers of English labor and late president of the St. George's Society. The orator of the occasion is to be Erastus Wiman, whose theme will be "The Duty and the Power of the Englishman in America."

Two Schooners Sunk in Lake Erie.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 11.—Two schooners went down in Lake Erie within a few miles of Cleveland last night during the gale. The Fannie L. Jones of this city, laden with limestone, sprang a leak and sank a mile from the breakwater. Captain E. C. Cummings was drowned, but the remainder of the crew were rescued. The schooner Two Fannies of Kenosha, with iron ore from Escanaba to Cleveland, went down 12 miles off this harbor. The crew took to the yawl boat and were picked up by the steamer City of Detroit.

HAMILTON'S TOURNAMENT.

A Big Crowd in Attendance—Winners in the Band Competition.

HAMILTON, Aug. 11.—To-day was Civic Holiday in Hamilton and excursion trains carrying large crowds were run to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and Orillia. The attraction in the city, however, kept most of the people at home and also induced a large number of visitors to come from all parts. The band tournament, under the auspices of the 13th Battalion, which was opened here to-day, and will be concluded to-morrow evening, was the attraction of the day, and the affair was a success in every particular. The number of bands entered was not as large as was at first expected, but the quality of the music was good. Immense crowds gathered at Dundurn Park to hear the competing bands and watch the games and other sports which were going on at the same time.

In the second-class band competition Bowmanville Band of Bowmanville obtained first prize, Taylor's Safe Works Band of Toronto second, and "C" Company Band of Toronto third prize. Fourth and fifth prizes were divided equally between Baden Band, Peterboro Band and Thorold Band.

In the fife and drum band competition the Pioneer Fife and Drum Band of Hamilton took first prize and L. O. L. 779 of Hamilton second.

For best appearance on march "C" Company Band of Toronto got first prize and Pioneer Fife and Drum Band of Hamilton second.

The first-class band competition takes place to-morrow afternoon and the winners will be announced to-morrow night.

WEBB CLAIMS A VICTORY.

HE SAYS THE CENTRAL HAS WON THE STRIKE.

But the Despatches Make It Appear that He is Shouting a Little Too Soon—Pinkerton Men Making Up Freight Trains and Guarding the Switches.

ALBANY, Aug. 11.—Everything has been quiet here to-day. The passenger service is somewhat better than yesterday, but everything is still comparatively in a state of chaos around the Central station. Some of the trains running between Albany and New York were an hour late and others were on time, while those from the west were two to ten hours late. No attempt will be made to move freight trains out of the West Albany yards until additional Pinkerton men arrive in such numbers as will allow them to picket the yard around its miles of boundary. Carpenters employed by the Central were to-day erecting 260 bunks in the West Albany paint shop for the accommodation of these men when they arrive. The dressed beef which was stalled in this vicinity has all been drawn to the immense ice houses at Karner's. The train which blocks the upper railway bridge is still lying there and the stench which arises from decaying dressed beef in some of the cars is sickening.

Nothing to Arbitrate.

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—Florence Donovan of the State Board of Arbitration called upon Mr. Webb this morning and said the strikers had requested him to meet Mr. Webb and try to arrange the difficulty by arbitration. Mr. Webb received him courteously, but told him distinctly there was nothing to arbitrate. Mr. Donovan did not argue the matter but withdrew.

District Workman E. J. Lee said this morning that between here and Buffalo there were about 6060 men on strike. Reports received by him showed everything to be in good condition.

Purely a K. of L. Strike.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—Representatives of the New York Central Railway are here hiring men to take the places of striking switchmen and brakemen. Fifty recruits were forwarded to Buffalo Saturday night and another lot was sent this morning. They are promised $70 per month for switchmen and $65 for brakemen, an advance of $15 and $10 over the wages ruling for these classes of men on the road.

The Pinkerton agency here has also received an order for a large number of men to act as guards along the road. Grand Master Sweeney of the Switchmen's Brotherhood says he will not call out the switchmen on the Michigan Central and Lake Shore roads to assist the strikers on the New York Central. He says it is purely a Knights of Labor strike.

But Is It True?

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—The officials of the New York Central & Hudson River Railway announce that there is now no interruption to passenger traffic on the lines of the New York Central, all through passenger trains being run on tabular schedule time.

Says the Strike is Over.

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—During the afternoon and evening the Grand Central depot was as quiet as though no strike had occurred. Trains were continually arriving and leaving in the usual manner and the entire business of the depot had resumed its normal condition. Vice-President Webb said at 9 p.m. that the strike, so far as the New York Central was concerned, was at an end. On to-day's schedule at the Grand Central depot there were 138 Central Railway trains. Of these 120 left the depot almost on schedule time.

All Quiet at Syracuse.

SYRACUSE, Aug. 11.—All is quiet in Syracuse, the railway trouble being confined to the yards at East Syracuse, which seems to be the present key to the situation. The Central authorities to-day began moving all passenger trains over the West Shore, switching at Kirkville on the east and at Oswego junction on the west, bringing trains back on to the Central here. The Central tracks through Syracuse are to-day practically abandoned.

Pinkertons as Railroaders.

SYRACUSE, Aug. 11.—If Syracuse is the key to the situation it was lost to the strikers this evening when they were driven from the yards at East Syracuse by the Pinkerton men sent here Sunday. The Pinkerton men and railway men then began the work of making up and forwarding the freight cars containing perishable property which were tied up. About 20 freight trains were held in the yard and two trains were made up and started by the Pinkerton force without violence being offered. The detectives reported that the trouble was all over and that the yards at East Syracuse would be all cleared of freight in a few hours.

No Regular Freights Running.

FONDA, N.Y., Aug. 11.—Several freight trains filled with perishable property are standing near Schenectady and also a large number of carloads of lager en route for Boston. Fresh meat is scarce in Mohawk Valley towns and at Amsterdam it has advanced 4 cents a pound. No regular freights have passed over the road since the tie-up commenced.

Will Run the Milk Train.

DOVER PLAINS, N.Y., Aug. 11.—The first real excitement here over the railroad strike was caused to-night by the arrival of Superintendent Worcester, accompanied by 24 armed Pinkerton men. The railway men quit work when ordered to do so, but no demonstration has been made. The Pinkerton men are quartered here and will run the milk train north to-morrow. There has been no attempt to run trains from here yet.

Benefited by the Strike.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—The Canadian Pacific is always on top. The strike on the American lines is doing it a world of good. It compels passengers to leave New York for Boston and from thence take the big Canadian line for the west. The passenger traffic in the past three days has been doubled, and American passengers have to leave the States, go back to New England and come up over the Southeastern line to Montreal, whence they can proceed to Chicago and the west. As far as the Canadian lines are concerned they would not be alarmed if the strike continued an indefinite time. The American trains are all from three to four hours late, and the bulk of the traffic is going over the Canadian lines that have direct connection with New York.

"Well," said a swell young women of the west end to a friend after half an hour's experience with a pompous fledgling of twenty, "well, for a man who doesn't know anything that youngster knows more than any man I ever met."—Washington Star.

THE RAILWAY STRIKE.

Trains Moving All Right—Plenty of Hands at Work.

By Telegraph to the Review.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—At the Grand Central depot this morning there no longer existed even the semblance of a strike. Passenger trains were coming in and going out with all appearance of their usual regularity. Order has been restored at Syracuse and trains are running without interruption. Vice-President Webb says that the company have all the men they want.

To Nervous Debilitated Men.

If you will send us your address, we will mail you our illustrated pamphlet explaining all about Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belt and Appliances, and their charming effects upon the nervous debilitated system, and how they will quickly restore you to vigor, and manhood. Pamphlet free. If you are thus afflicted, we will send you a Belt and Appliances on a trial.
VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall Mich.

Culinary Wisdom.

SPONGE TRIFLE.—Put into a glass dish six three-inch squares of sponge cake previously cut in half and spread with preserves or marmalade put together again, and stuck over the top with a few blanched almonds. Soak them for half an hour in two wine glasses of sherry, unless your principles forbid, when milk flavored with vanilla will prove a good substitute. Beat the yolks of six fresh eggs thoroughly with two tablespoonfuls of white sugar, and add three cups of boiling milk, pouring it over slowly and beating the white. Flavor to taste. Pour into a small saucepan and set within another of boiling water, stirring constantly and always one way until it becomes of the consistency of triple cream. Let it partially cool and pour over the sponge cake.

REAL SOUTHERN GUMBO.—Joint an old chicken; reserve the breast and put the rest into a large saucepan with four quarts of water. Add two ounces of thinly sliced bacon, a pint bowl of thinly sliced potatoes, one pint of tomatoes peeled and sliced, and one pint of okra likewise sliced; two onions cut small, salt, and a pod of red pepper broken small. Simmer for four or five hours. Meanwhile, break the bones of the breast, cut into fillets and fry. Add this to the soup and simmer another hour. Then add half a pint of corn, and if they are in season the same quantity of young, tender Lima beans. Just before sending to the table, thicken this soup with a tablespoonful of flour browned with the same quantity of brown sugar. Keep the quantity the same as at first by replenishing the saucepan from a kettle of boiling water. Some add a slice or two of lemon to the tureen. This soup is better the second day than the first.

CODFISH, SHAKER STYLE.—Buy one pounds of salt codfish, choosing a thick, middle cut; tear it in pieces, cover with cold water, and place where the water will heat slowly. If tastes too salt pour it off and add fresh hot (not boiling) water; letting it stand for another while without allowing the water to come to a boil, which toughens it. Drain, turn in to an earthen bowl and pick into flakes, taking out the bones with great care. Put a piece of butter the size of an egg into a saucepan, and, when it is melted, add a large tablespoonful of flour; stir until smooth; add a cup of boiling milk, the codfish, and seasoning to tasted. Now stir in one gill of hot cream, and pour into a buttered pie-dish. Drop one egg for each person on top, dust with salt and pepper and place in a hot oven until the eggs are set. This quantity of fish will be enough for eight persons and requires eight eggs.

VENISON PASTY.—Many of the readers can have this game for the shooting, and will enjoy a venison pie made as follows: The neck and shoulders are the best for the purpose. Cut enough of the meat into pieces an inch square to make a pie of the required size, and stew tender, simmering very slowly and adding a small minced onion, salt and pepper—the latter when the meat is nearly done. Meantime make a broth with all the trimmings and inferior portions, an onion, a few sprigs of sweet herbs, a blade of mace and salt and pepper. Cook these until all the substance is extracted; strain, and skim off the fat. Return to the fire, thicken with browned flour, and finish the seasoning with the juice of half a lemon. Line a deep dish with good paste; put in the stewed venison; season each layer with butter, adding a little of the broth in which the meat was stewed. The meat must be just covered with this, and the rest, if any, added to the gravy made by stewing the trimmings. Cover with a lid of paste, cut a circular hole, and bake two hours, covering with stout paper, to keep the crust from scorching. Just before it is done remove from the oven, and, with a small funnel, pour as much gravy in the hole in the top as the pie will hold.

His Last Game.

TORONTO, Aug. 12.—While playing pool yesterday Jesse Hanbury, aged 38, suddenly fell dead.

American or imitation ivory umbrella handles are new.

Lace shoulder capes having a jet yoke are costly and stylish.

Sateen gowns will trim with either velvet ribbon or embroidery.

The demand for poppy and daisy wreaths can hardly be supplied.

Novel shoulder capes are of silk cording, ending in a deep fringe.

Black grenadine over taffeta silk makes a refined visiting costume.

Large silver punch-bowls are decorated with East Indian effects.

Charming graduating dresses are of embroidered mousseline de soie.

Little watches of oxidized steel have a gold monogram on the back.

Heavy knotted fringes are sold for sash ends and trimming wraps.

Mosaic brooches and belt buckles are rare and highly prized possessions.

Green is the leading note for curtains, silk draperies, wall hangings, etc.

Silk gloves are more worn since the double-woven finger-tips came in fashion.

Red and black house dresses are worn with black hose and red ties.

"Catch-all" boxes of Dresden china are lined in silk and framed in silver.

Long lace scarfs are selling again for sashes, shoulder scarfs, evening hoods, etc.

A lovely inkstand is of brass enameled in colors, with the inkwell of cut glass.

Rolling linen collars will be worn with cotton and plainly made woolen gowns.

Small scent-bottles to carry in the palm of a glove are of silver, with gold tracery.

Odd sugar-bowls and cream-jugs of pierced silver are used for the after-dinner coffee.

Single roses having buds, foliage, and a long stem are the preferred corsage bouquet.

Moonstones set in silver, or the enameled flower designs, are correct for summer jewelry.

A lovely bonbonniere is of gold frosting having a bunch of blue forget-me-nots on the lid.

Yellow and lilac flowers are mixed for millinery, dress garniture, and table decoration.

Chambrays, ginghams, and challies are the most stylish cotton fabrics for the season.

White woolen gowns are trimmed with black, stem-green, violet, or yellow velvet ribbon.

Gauze parasols are laid in accordion pleats, and trimmed with rosettes of the same silky material.

An expensive gum-pot for a desk is of cut glass and silver, imitating a flower, stem and leaves.

The handsomest "robe" dresses of the season show lace effects under applique embroidery.

New parasols show plaid and striped effects, fringed and ruffled edges, and changeable brocades.

Shade hats of colored horse-hair are trimmed with ribbon bows, long pins, and a feather pompon.

Flower necklaces worn by bridesmaids are mounted on black velvet ribbon, and consist of small flat flowers.

New and expensive umbrella handles are of ivory covered with a lace-work or scroll designs of silver.

The newest sailor hats are trimmed with a ruching of Brussels net, white wings and a puffing of the net at the back.

Dancing slippers that make the feet look small are of black kid, with a large beaded bow, and ankle strap having a buckle.

Pretty Japanese fans have one side silver and the other gilt, with lacing up the outside mounts, and a tassel of contrasting colors.

Dresses of Valenciennes flouncing are trimmed with white (not cream) gros-grain ribbon and made over white surah or taffeta silk.

Flower diadems over an inch band of velvet, and held by narrow velvet ribbon strings seem to compose some evening bonnets.

Lovely menus are in the form of a tiny photograph-case, holding the picture of the hostess in one corner. The case is of silk brocade.

Artistic lounging robes for men are of white, colored or striped terry, with embroidered bands, and knotted girdle of wash embroidery silks.

The most beautiful bibelot in tortoise-shell is a tall folding screen for sixteen cabinet photos, each opening being adorned with delicate and elaborate silver tracery.

The newest dessert d'oyleys are square, of washing silk, with drawn threads forming several designs. There are also some in linen, with hemstitched borders, looking like miniature pocket-handkerchiefs; others in circular shape, with scalloped buttonholed borders, both exquisitely embroidered with rings of flowers in white silk.

A charming scheme of table decoration was lately seen at an artist's supper-table. The table was covered with delicate green silk, slightly draped with filmy, silver-threaded muslin, through which the green shimmered faintly. Thrown carelessly hither and thither were small rustic logs of all shapes and sizes, covered with lichen, moss, and maidenhair ferns. The lights were all softened with green and white shades. The effect was dainty and fairy-like.

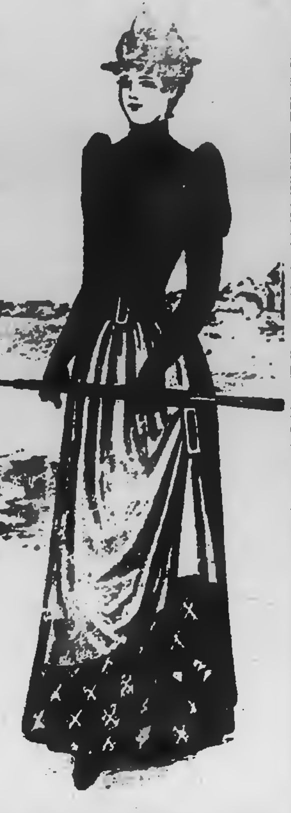
The Zarif wrap is novel in soft silk of any selected color, and resembles a burnous, with the tasseled hood so arranged that it forms a very becoming headdress when required. Another, and slight wrap, is the Upasana, a long, wide scarf of China silk or crepe, gathered up, and fastened by a large button at the throat, with each end drawn up tassel fashion, and intended to form a hood when thrown around the head and throat.

Flowers of one color are painted on gauze of the palest shade of it, and mounted on enameled wood to match, for fans. A pale green has sprays of lilies of the valley and leaves, with enameled mounts; a blush pink, bunches of pink daisies; a gold-hued gauze has tiger lilies, and gold mounts and some exquisitely painted white water-lilies and heath, on white, has pearl mounts. Some shaded pansies on pale mauve have violet tinted mother-of-pearl mounts; and a group of clustered tulips of a brickdust hue, on a much paler shade of gauze, has mounts of corresponding color. One design consists of a graceful basket painted in the centre of the fan, with lilies of the valley springing from it.

MUTTON CURRY.—Cut half a pound of cold boiled or roast mutton into neat squares; chop and fry an onion; add the meat; toss it about for a few minutes; strew over half a teaspoonful of curry, and add broth, made from the bones, enough to cover the meat. As soon as it simmers stir in a teaspoonful of flour, wet with cold water, and pour in the center of a border of nicely steamed rice. This is a good way of using the "everlasting cold mutton."

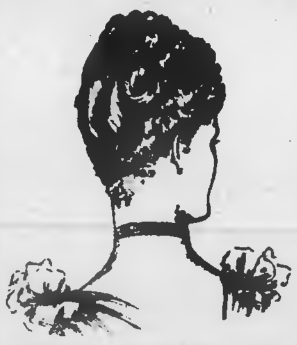
VEGETABLE STEW.—This is a treat to lovers of vegetables. Slice thinly one cold boiled carrot, one turnip, two potatoes, one onion; add three ears of corn cut from the cob, one cup each of lima beans, string beans and peas, all cooked; one quarter of a pound of salt pork, finely chopped, and one sliced tomato; cover with equal quantities of broth and milk, and stew twenty minutes. Thicken with butter and flour and season with salt and pepper.

A Fashionable Costume.

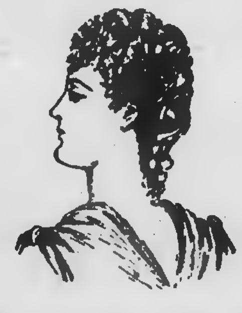


A very fashionable costume is here illustrated. It is composed of plain and plaid goods. The foundation skirt has a wide fold of the plaided goods also has the drapery, which is looped on the left side with a buckle. The bodice is composed of a slashed yoke, puffed sleeves, buttoned on the inside of the arms and is fastened by a buckle at the waist. Sailor hat trimmed with plaid ribbon completes the costume.

The Latest Coiffures.

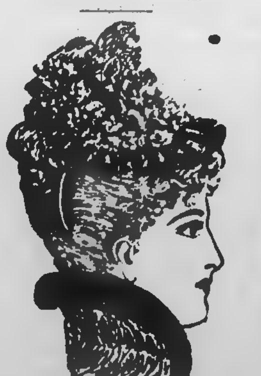


This is a more dressy design suitable for the evening only, and is composed of short curls, finger puffs, and ends in a heavy curl fastened with a shell slide; several other fancy pins are used through the coiffure.

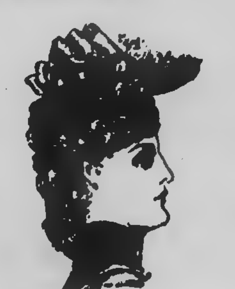


This shows all of the hair combed in three short rope twists, the centre one is the longer, above the curly locks resting on the nape of the neck. The entire top of the head is then covered with false curls that are short, loosely curled, and giving an Empire effect. An erect bow of ribbon, pompon, flowers, or fancy pins may ornament the top of the head toward one side.

Some Handsome Hats.



This illustrates a small toque frame surrounded with a box-pleated frill of black velvet, which narrows toward the back, a black lace crown, and wreath of yellow flowers, almost covering the crown.



This is of black straw, trimmed with loops of ribbon over the crown, a wreath of flowers, and a bunch of flowers under the side of the brim.

Wiman Visits Washington.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Erastus Wiman spent yesterday in Washington, breakfasting with Major McKinley. He dined with Mr. Hitt and had supper with Speaker Reed. The object of his visit to these eminent Republicans could not be learned, but it is supposed to have been due to Mr. Wiman's hobby in the matter of reciprocal trade relations with Canada.

The Templars' Encampment.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—Preparations on a large scale are in progress for the inauguration of the Encampment of the Royal Templars, which will commence here on Thursday. The camp will be pitched from Aug. 14 to 21, both days inclusive, and promises to be the largest temperance demonstration held here in many years.

THE CHEESE BOARD.

Cheese Sold at a Rather Low Figure—A Drop in the Market.

A regular meeting of the Cheese Board was held in the new market building at noon to-day. The buyers present were Messrs. Cluxton, Wrighton, Cook, Fitzgerald and Spence. Twenty-eight factories boarded 3,873 boxes. Before the business proper was proceeded with it was decided to purchase a new black board with the names of the factories painted thereon and Messrs. Sanderson, Wrighton and Cluxton were appointed a committee to procure the board.

The cheese boarded was as follows:—

Liverpool was quoted at 48s.

Bidding was slow. The first offer was one of 7½c. by Mr. Fitzgerald. Mr. Wrighton raised it to 8c. for selections, but Mr. Fitzgerald went ⅛c. better and he secured Warminster and Cherry Grove at that figure. Mr. Cook then bid 8c. for further selections, and Mr. Fitzgerald offered 8 1-16c. and selected Peterborough, but the offer was refused. Mr. Wrighton offered 8c. for further selections, and Mr. Fitzgerald again raised it 1-16c. and Missing Link accepted. Mr. Cook next bid 8c. for further selections and got Keene, Shearer, North Smith, Central Smith, Warsaw, Pine Grove, Otonabee Union, Maple Leaf and Myrtle. This left Westwood, Melrose Abbey and South Dummer unsold in the Peterborough section. Mr. Wrighton then bid 7½c. for selections in the Victoria section, but this offer was refused.

After some discussion the unsold factories of the Peterborough board and the Victoria section were given permission to sell off the Board.

ENCOURAGING CHEESE-MAKING.

During the progress of the meeting Mr. Cook took occasion to lay a matter before the Board which is of interest to all cheese makers. He said it was proposed by the Eastern Dairymen's Association to hold an exhibition for cheese, at which prizes amounting to about six hundred dollars were to be offered. The different cheese boards could contribute if they so wished. The Belleville Board had contributed one dollar each, and he asked the Peterborough Board to consider the matter. If cheese-makers did not show cheese, salesmen were entitled to exhibit two cheese and would receive the prize. It was decided to deal with this matter at the next meeting. Mr. Cook also took occasion to refer to the coloring of cheese. He said he had received frequent complaints of late in regard to the coloring of Canadian cheese. The complaint was that it was colored too high and he advised makers in future to use one ounce and a half of coloring instead of two ounces.

The Board adjourned for two weeks.

Blacking.

The Grand Lodge of Oddfellows of Ontario opens in Toronto to-morrow morning. The representatives from the local lodges who will attend will be Bros. John Mathieson, P.G., and J. G. Early, P.G., of Otonabee Lodge, No. 13, and Bros. D. H. Moore, P.G., A. McFarlane, P.G., and S. Clegg, P.G., of Peterborough Lodge No. 111.

Blocking the Sidewalk.

For some hours Thursday part of the sidewalk on George-st., between Simcoe and Charlotte, was blocked by the extensive stock of ale being brought in by W. J. Morrow. Several complaints were made but Mr. Morrow after securing a large staff had it removed. The stock consists principally of the celebrated White Label, and the number of cars that have come to his address these few months past speaks volumes for the ale. d27w31

Why is it?

Reasons why the Sons of Canada picnic is the one to take in:—Because it is the cheapest, tickets 50c., children 25c.; because it is a delightful trip, no smoke and cinders, lots of fresh air and sunshine; because Doucet's orchestra will furnish music; because there is good fishing and canoes will be carried free; because there is a ladies' solid silver watch and chain to be drawn for; because there will be lots of fun and enjoyment; because you are all sons and daughters of Canada; because the committee will furnish tea and hot water free and look after your baskets; because meals on boat and at hotel are only 25c.; because we do as we advertise. Don't forget boat leaves wharf at 7.30 a.m. 4d34

Left to Celebrate.

The anniversary of the relief of Derry is being celebrated at Norwood and Belleville to-day, and at each of these places Peterborough is represented. Jubilee Lodge of 'Prentice Boys left for Belleville at 8.30 to participate in the 'Prentice Boys demonstration there. There was a good turnout of the Order. The Millbrook band accompanied the excursion and will head the Peterborough 'Prentice Boys in the procession. The True Blues excursion to Norwood was well patronized. The fourth line band, of Smith, and the Fife and Drum Band furnished the music for the brethren who went to Norwood. About 9.30 a procession was formed headed by the Smith band, then came the two local lodges and Nassau lodge with banner. The King William True Blue Lodge came next, headed by its fife and drum band, and Rising Sun Lodge, L. T. B., brought up the rear of the procession. Pontypool, Janetville and Manvers lodges were also on the train which left shortly before ten.

Mr. TAYLOR addressed the Council in regard to the Brooks Co. bonus and said that in regard to the number of hands employed, there was nothing binding in the by-law for this year. They had, however, got on further at this time than he had expected and had thirty-three hands employed.

Councillor Davidson read the by-law covering the matter.

The matter was referred to the Finance Committee.

With reference to the application for increase of salaries, your committee would recommend that in view of the large expenditure and low scale of wages, that no increase be granted on salaries for this year.

Your committee would also recommend that the clerk write the G. T. R. and C. P. R. with reference to the gates across certain streets, some of which have already been promised to the Council.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. S. DAVIDSON,
Chairman.

The report was adopted.

STREETS AND BRIDGES.

Councillor LANGFORD read the report of the Street & Bridge Committee as follows:

To the Mayor and Council:

GENTLEMEN,—Your Street and Bridge Committee beg leave to report as follows:

Recommended—A sidewalk on Stewart-st., near Murray, about 50 feet.

Recommend a sidewalk on Bethune-st., north of Dublin, about 75 feet.

Recommend a sidewalk on King-st., west to boundary.

Recommend a sidewalk on Bethune-st., between Perry and Lake, about 80 feet.

Tenders for laying sidewalks were asked for, and awarded to Mr. T. Irwin.

Tenders for cribwork were also asked for, and Mr. M. Bolton was the lowest.

A drinking fountain has been placed on Water-st., near the town buildings, and the fountain in Central Park put in running order.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WM. LANGFORD,
Chairman.

Aug. 11, 1890.

Councillor MOORE said that grading ordered to be done on Weller-st. had not been done and a drain had not been built.

Councillor LANGFORD said the cutting of a drain would be more expensive than had been thought. If the Council ordered the work done they would go on with it.

Councillors RUTHERFORD and DAWSON also pressed for the work on Weller-st.

After further discussion the report was adopted.

CHARITY.

Councillor A. HALL read the following report of the Charity Committee:

To the Mayor and Town Council of the Town of Peterborough:—

GENTLEMEN,—Your Charity Committee beg leave to report that the amount of relief given in the months of May, June and July amounts to $231.65. For No. 1 Ward, $78; for No. 2 Ward, $79.05; for No. 3 Ward, $68; for No. 4 Ward, $12. Your Committee recommend that merchants who supply goods on charity orders give details of articles supplied on the back of the orders. Below is a detailed statement of relief given and the names of each person receiving charity and the amount received by them.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

ADAM HALL,
Chairman.

The report was adopted after discussion.

SEWERAGE.

Councillor LANGFORD submitted a report of the Sewers Committee, stating that Mr. J. E. Belcher's tender for taking the levels of the town, being the lowest, was accepted and that a deputation had visited Montreal, Brockville and Kingston. The Brockville system, an adaptation of the separate system, the committee regarded as the one best suited to the requirements of the town. This system was described and its advantages pointed out, as appeared in the REVIEW after the deputation's return, and acknowledged the courtesies extended to the deputation at Brockville.

The report was received.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

Councillor A. HALL read the report of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, which recommended several changes in the placing of the lamps from that proposed in the report submitted at the last meeting.

Councillor HARTLEY objected to the taking away of a light on Edinburgh-st.

Councillor RUTHERFORD also objected to the report as presented.

Councillor A. HALL defended the placing of the lamps as in the report.

Councillor RUTHERFORD moved, seconded by Councillor MOORE—That the report be referred back to the committee for further consideration.

Councillor A. HALL argued that the all-night lights were necessary, especially in the centre of the town.

Councillor LANGFORD said that if this report were passed the light used by the town would cost $6,500, and other demands would come in, and it would run up to $8,000. The matter should receive further consideration.

Councillor E. H. D. HALL said that the report which adopted the forty all-night lamps, also ordered thirty-five extra lights, and if they re-opened one matter they should reconsider both. This was a large expenditure and should receive careful consideration.

The amendment to again refer was carried.

FIRE LIMITS.

The Council went into committee of the whole on the second reading of the fire limit or building by-law.

Councillor RUTHERFORD objected to the provision that permitted wooden storehouses to be erected 57 feet east of Bethune-st., on certain conditions.

Councillor E. H. D. HALL said that not a property owner on the street would be injured, but they would be benefitted instead.

The by-law was passed through committee after considerable discussion and with slight amendments, and read a third time.

TAXES REMITTED.

Councillor MOORE moved, seconded by Councillor DAWSON—That the statute labor tax of Jos. McClelland and the balance of taxes of Jas. Smith be remitted.—Carried.

A WOODEN SEWER.

Councillor LANGFORD moved,—That the wooden sewer on Hunter-st. be closed, as it was the cause of bad odor.

The motion stood over as a notice of motion.

THE TOWN SEWER.

Councillor CAHILL moved, seconded by Councillor DAVIDSON,—That in future no persons be permitted to make connections with the sewer on George-st. without the permission of the Street Inspector, and that the actual connection with the sewer be made by some person named by the Street Inspector and at the expense of the person desiring the connection, and that the Street Inspector be instructed to see that this resolution is carried out.

SLAUGHTER HOUSES.

Councillor DAVIDSON moved, seconded by Councillor DAWSON,—That this Council request the Board of Health to allow the butchers to use their present premises until May 1st, 1891, provided that the premises be kept in a condition satisfactory to the Medical Health officer and the Inspectors of the Board of Health.—Carried.

The Council adjourned for one week.

Notes From the Lakes.

Sunday was rather chilly for the camping community, the cold wave being a little too pronounced for campers' comfort.

Mr. Robt. Hall and family came down from their pretty cottage at "the Syndicate" last night. Mr. Walter Paterson's party which has been at Anchorage Island for the past two weeks and enjoyed a grand outing also came down last evening.

Messrs. H. Stock's and J. Crane's "Harmony Camp" on Gin Island breaks up on Wednesday. Mr. A. Clegg who was one of this camp came down last night.

"Echo" camp broke up yesterday. The boys had a great time and they will be missed at the islands.

Detective Stark spent a day or two at "the Syndicate" last week.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Peplow and Mr. Hobert, of Kingston, are spending a few days at Mr. Peplow's cottage on Anchorage Island.

Messrs. W. Droupe, of the Collegiate Institute, H. Schofield, of Hamilton, and F Ferris, of Campbellford, are also enjoying camp life on "Anchorage."

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Pope came home after a pleasant outing last evening.

The following Port Hope gentlemen were invited by Capt. Sam Reynolds, of the Cruiser, to a trip up the back lakes on Saturday. They being members of the "Lime Kiln Band" of that town. It is surmised the Capt. was a member also. They comprised the "Spanish Windlass" party to pull the boat off a shoal yesterday morning:—Thos. Walker, Col. Hambly, Sandy McLennan, Jimmy Roland, Ed. THE ATTEMPTED TRAIN-WRECKING

A Warrant Issued for the Arrest of a Suspected Man.

The dastardly attempt to wreck the Lakefield train on Saturday, which was reported in last evening's REVIEW, caused considerable comment. What could possibly inspire any person to do such a dastard's deed as to throw from the rails a train which was carrying on board nearly one hundred happy pleasure seekers who were either just returning from an outing or were on their way full of anticipation for a holiday at the lake of islands? That the man who contemplated and attempted such an act was not sane was the general conclusion, and such would appear to be the case from the developments.

Detective Spence, of the G. T. R., came down on Saturday evening and proceeded to work on the case, with the result that this morning he swore out a warrant for the arrest of William Northcote on the charge of obstructing the train. The man whose name appears in the information is about twenty-two years of age, and is the son of respectable parents in Lakefield. It is said that he is rather weak minded and is liable to commit deeds that may be suggested to his mind on the spur of the moment. He is in the habit of leaving home and remaining away for weeks, wandering around the neighborhood in the day time and spending the night where darkness overtakes him. On Tuesday last he got out of his bed about eleven o'clock at night and left his home, and has not returned since. On Friday he was arrested here as a vagrant, being found by the police wandering aimlessly about the streets. He was released Saturday morning and ordered to leave town. This he did, and, it is thought, travelled towards Lakefield, and during his travels put the obstructions on the track which threatened the lives of so many and destruction of the railway property. He was seen near the place where the ties were placed on the track and was met again by the train men at Auburn. The fact that both the attempts were made in daylight would lead to the conclusion that the act was not that of a sane person whose sole object was a cowardly and inhuman desire to wreck the train.

The whereabouts of Northcote is not exactly known at present, but as he is well known among the farming community, and as the latter are considerably exercised over the attempts at train wrecking, it is fortunate he will be in the toils before long.

Detective Spence says he has good evidence that he has the right man.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"But my marrying him would not make him a count. Were he a count, and I like what he is now in station, his marrying me would give me the title: but we poor women do not have that power."

"Well, then, we should so much more have the right to choose our own husbands."

Rosalind made no oral answer, but his look showed that she sympathized with the sentiment.

"My mistress," at length spoke Zenobie again, this time in a low whisper, "why may we not leave this place?"

Rosalind started as though she had heard the speech of a spirit, and for a moment a look of hope gleamed upon her face; but it quickly passed away.

"Alas! where should we go?"

This was a part of the plan which Zenobie had not thought of; and ere she could make any reply one of the female domestics entered the apartment.

This was a part of the plan which Zenobie had not thought of; and ere she could make any reply one of the female domestics entered the apartment, and announced that a woman wished to see her young mistress. Rosalind asked who it was, but the girl could only tell her that it was a middle-aged woman, and very good-looking. The young countess bade Zenobie go down and conduct her up. Ere long afterwards the attendant returned and with her came Claudia Nevel. Rosalind had not seen the good woman for over a year, but she knew her at once, and starting up from her seat she bounded forward and embraced her warmly.

"Ah, Aunt Claudia, I am glad you have come. You will let me call you aunt, as I did in those happy times long gone by."

"Aye, sweet Rosalind," returned the widow, imprinting a warm kiss upon the fair brow.

The countess noticed the strange sadness of the woman's tone, and then for the first time, also, she noticed the sadness of her look.

"Aunt Claudia, you look sad," she said, while a chill dread struck to her own heart.

"Aye," the widow uttered, as though she were afraid to venture the question she wished to ask. "I have been very sad, because I have had a terrible fear. Has—has—not Ruric been here?"

"When?" uttered the maiden, catching the whole fear now.

"Within these three days?"

"Just then. Day before yesterday he was here in the forenoon."

"And I have not seen him since?" the poor woman groaned.

"Not seen him?—Ruric gone? Oh, where? where?

"He said he was going to see the Count Damonoff when he left here," interposed Zenobie, who joined in the grief.

"Aye—so he told me," returned the mother. "I have been there, and they have not seen him since that evening. The surgeon who attends the count went out to the inn where Ruric put up his horse, and the animal was still there, his owner having not called for him."

"Oh, God, have mercy!" ejaculated the young countess, in a paroxysm of grief.

"At this moment there came a rap upon the door, and Zenobie went to answer the summons. It was the black monk, Valdimir, who thus demanded admittance. At any other time both Rosalind and Claudia might have been startled by the strange visit, but now they instinctively hailed his coming as a source of hope.

"Ladies," spoke the fat monk, approaching the spot where they stood, and bowing very low, "you will pardon this unseemly method of gaining admission here, but I had no other choice, for I feared the duke would refuse me did I apply to him. I have come to learn, if possible, where Ruric Nevel may be."

The widow tried to answer, but instead of speaking she burst into tears. Rosalind struggled a moment with the deep emotions that stirred within her, and she, too, fell to weeping. Zenobie was obliged to answer.

"Good father," said she, "we here are after the same knowledge. His poor mother has come here to try if she might find some clue to the noble youth; and thus did my mistress gain the first intelligence that he was gone. Pray, good sir, do you know anything about him? What have you heard?"

Both Claudia and the young countess now raised their heads, for they would hear what reply the monk could make.

"I only know that he is missing," Valdimir replied. "A little while ago I called upon the sick count, and there I learned that Ruric Nevel had mysteriously disappeared. And I learned, also, of the noble purpose for which he visited the count.

"Aye," interposed Claudia, with sudden energy, "he went to try and gain the count's forgiveness. I don't think they spoke falsely there. I don't think any there would wish him harm from any lingering revenge.

"Go, on," returned the monk; "his mission thither was most nobly fulfilled. So far from cherishing any spirit of revenge is the count, that he will ever bear from Ruric the holiest gratitude of his soul."

"Do you think so?" the widow asked hopefully.

"I know it," was the monk's assured reply. "But," he continued, relapsing into perplexity, "I can not imagine what has become of him. But hold. My dear child, is there not a humpbacked, ungainly priest who sometimes visits your guardian?"

This was addressed [illegible] fearful tremor shook her frame as she heard it, for its import was at once apparent.

"Do you suspect—" she had started forward and grasped the monk's arm, as she thus commenced, but she could not continue. The thought she would have uttered was terrible.

"Go on," whispered Valdimir, bending his head low down so as to catch her very thoughts if they left her lips. "What would you say?"

"Oh, I ought not—and yet I know his soul is capable even of that." Thus much the fair countess murmured to herself; and then she gazed up and spoke to the strange man before her:

"Do you suspect my guardian?"

"Do you suspect him?" the monk returned.

"Oh, I know not what to think!"

"But listen:" resumed Valdimir, earnestly. "I would know all that you know, and then perhaps I can assist you. Fear not, for as true as God lives I mean to save Ruric if I can; and if I can but gain a clue to him now, I can surely save you both. Trust me, for I possess a wondrous power for the good of those who trust me. Now, what end could the duke have in view in concocting the duel: It was the death of Damonoff, and the undivided possession of Drotzen. Now, answer me. What does he aim at now?"

In spite of all doubts Rosalind found herself trusting the monk. There was an air of conscious truth and power in his look and tone that won upon her.

"Good father," she returned, after a few moments' thought, "the duke has sworn by the most fearful oath that he will have me for his wife!"

To be continued.

CARDINAL NEWMAN DEAD.

The Distinguished Prelate Passes Away at a Ripe Old Age.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Cardinal Newman is dead. He became ill Saturday, when he had a severe chill. He passed into a comatose condition Sunday and remained unconscious until he died this evening.

John Henry Newman was born in London, Feb. 21, 1801, graduated at Trinity College, Oxford, in 1820, was elected a fellow of Oriel College in 1822 and there assisted Dr. Whately in preparing for publication the "Dialogs on Logic." He was ordained as a clergyman of the Church of England in 1824, in 1825 became vice-principal of St. Alban Hall and in 1826 a tutor of Oriel. In 1829 he opposed the re-election of Sir Robert Peel as member of the University of Oxford because of that statesman's advocacy of Catholic Emancipation. In 1830 he was chosen one of the select university preachers. In 1837 appeared his "Essay on Justification," controverting the Lutheran doctrine on that subject, while his "University Sermons" discuss the relation of faith and reason and investigate the ultimate basis of religious belief. In the summer of 1838 he published a pamphlet on the "Real Presence," in which, seeking to give to the eucharistic doctrine an intellectual basis, he denied the objective reality of space. He now became editor of The British Critic, and remained so till July, 1841. The Bishop of Oxford having in 1839 animadverted publicly on The Tracts for the Times, Dr. Pusey replied by denying their Romanizing tendencies. This opposition emboldened the tractarian writers, and Dr. Newman defined more and more clearly the relative positions of Anglicanism and Romanism, till his attempt to reconcile the Anglican teaching of the thirty-nine articles with Roman Catholic dogma culminated in Tract No. 90 in February, 1841. He was called upon to withdraw the tract, but refused. When the British and Prussian Governments created a bishopric in Jerusalem (1841) he protested against the alliance about to be contracted in the East "with Nestorians, Monophysites, etc." In February, 1843, he made a formal retraction of the charges which he had uttered against the Church of Rome, and in September gave up his living and resigned his office as a clergyman. To his house at Littlemore he had invited several persons whose minds were disturbed like his own, and this was represented as an attempted revival of monasticism. He busied himself and his associates with "Translations from Athanasius," and writing a series called "Lives of the English Saints," in order to give the writers "an interest in the English soil and the English church and keep them from seeking sympathy with Rome." Some thirty writers were engaged in this work, the lives to form a periodical series, with Dr. Newman as editor. The first two numbers only, containing the "Life of St. Stephen Harding" and "The Family of St. Richard," were edited by him, the others being published independently by their respective authors. He began his "Essay on the Development of Doctrine" in the beginning of 1845, was received into the Roman Catholic Church Oct. 9 and left Oxford finally Feb. 22, 1846. Soon afterward Dr. Wiseman called him to Oscott and thence sent him to Rome. There he took orders, and returning to England in 1848 established two houses of the Oratory of St. Philip Neri at Brompton and Birmingham, becoming superior of the latter, which in a few years was transferred to Edgbaston. There he built a large convent and a spacious church, with a school for the sons of the gentry and poor schools and other pious institutions in the neighborhood. In 1854 he was appointed by the Pope rector of the newly founded Catholic University of Dublin. At the approach of the Vatican Council a letter from Dr. Newman was published expressing dissatisfaction with the ultramontanes for urging factiously the definition of pontifical infallibility, but professing belief in the doctrine itself.

Judge Miles O'Reilly.

HAMILTON, Aug. 11.—Judge Miles O'Reilly died at his residence, Catharine-street south, at an early hour this morning, aged 84 years. The deceased judge was Ontario's oldest barrister, the oldest Queen's Counsel with the exception of Sir John A. Macdonald and the oldest judge in the Dominion. He was elevated to the bench in 1837 as judge of Gore District. He held commission as colonel of militia and has been Master-in-Chancery for 19 years. Both of Mr. O'Reilly's grandsires were United Empire Loyalists. He was born in Stamford in 1806 and was Hamilton's oldest inhabitant, having lived here for the past 60 years. He was confined to his bed three weeks ago and succumbed to old age, as he had no specific disease. His wife is the daughter of the late Mr. James Racey.

MANITOBA'S SCHOOL LAW.

Proposal that French Catholics Be Instructed to Ignore Its Provisions.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 11.—The Tribune tonight says the committee on school affairs of St. Jean Baptiste Society has taken some important steps in regard to the position of Catholics to the school law. A motion was made that instruction be given to French Catholics throughout the province to entirely ignore the school law and to continue their teaching as under the former regime.

A movement is on foot to build an electric railway in Winnipeg. Three gentlemen from St. Paul are now here in connection with the scheme.

Gray, the Wisconsin express robber, was taken this morning to Harley in charge of a Wisconsin sheriff. There are two claimants for the reward for his capture, Chief McRae of Winnipeg and Sheriff Redgrave of Donald.

The provincial synod of Rupert's Land opens here Wednesday and afterwards there will be a conference of delegates from the different dioceses in Canada to arrange for consolidation of the Church of England in the Dominion.

Mayor Pearson has returned home from a prolonged trip through eastern Canada and the States.

Despatches sent out by grain men to bull the grain market reported that frost had done serious injury to Manitoba crops. This is a pure fabrication. Despatches from all over the province state that at no point on Friday night did the mercury register lower than 34 degrees. Wheat harvesting will be general this week. The weather is now warm.

There are several cases of glanders in horses reported in various sections of Manitoba. Horses in the territories are also affected somewhat with the disease.

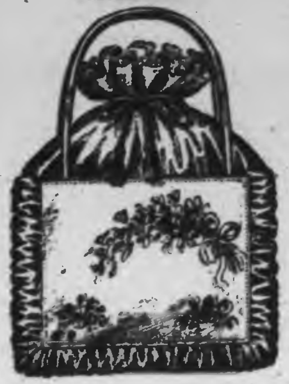
A young English swell, who has been loitering in the city for some time, went south this morning, and it is currently reported that he will be married at Grand Forks to a leading member of the Baker Opera Company, who were here the past few weeks.

The new Jewish synagogue recently erected here shows signs of collapsing, and the walls have been braced up.

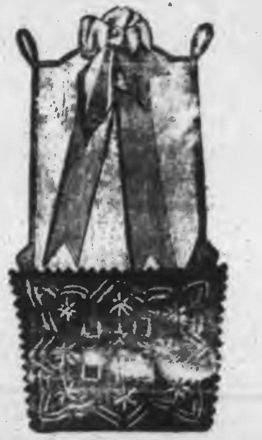
Wheat cutting began to-day on the Brandon experimental farm. The Ladoga variety is the most promising.

Mr. Roberts, who had a foot taken off at Minnedosa on Saturday, had his leg amputated below the knee to-day.

Artistic Devices.

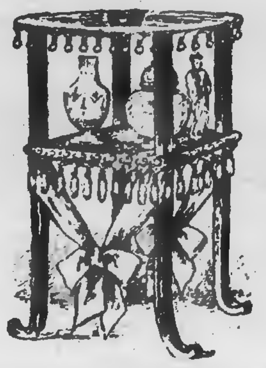


Here represented an old-fashioned workbag, which may be a silk, brocade, plush, or cashmere, with the almost square panels of a contrasting or embroidered material. In the illustration the panels are of ivory-colored satin, decorated with flower sprays in silk embroidery or painting. A puffing of pink satin is fulled around there sides of the panels, and also forms the bag top, which is drawn up with silk cords. The flat handles are of satin, lined with canvas.



This represents a hanging pocket of green velvet and silk, and gold-colored sateen, the latter forming the lining to the back, small panel, and answering for the side tabs, which are the length of the panel, and four inches wide at the top, narrowing a trifle toward the bottom.

Cardboard is the foundation for the back, which is covered with silk, and edged with green and gold cord twisted in two loops at the corners to hang the pocket up. The panel of velvet is embroidered with gold-colored silk, pinked on the edges, and cut two inches wider at the top than at the bottom. A large bow of green ribbons ornaments the centre.



Ordinary pine will answer for the little occasional table, shown with two coats of white or colored enamel applied. The top and shelf are covered with brocaded silk over a layer of wadding, and edged with ball fringe, headed with a gimp through which gilt nails are tacked to fasten it to the table. Two ribbon bows, of a color to match the brocade, are tied as shown. These tables are used to display curios and bric-a-brac upon.

EDMUND YATES' GOSSIP.

THE KAISER'S AMIABILITY AND ENERGY.

His Grandmother Delighted—The Archduchess Valerie's Dowry—Another American Princess—The Cowardly Persecution of Mrs. Mackay.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Edmund Yates cables The Tribune from London: Nothing could exceed the Emperor's amiability while on his visit to the Queen, and his evident desire to be very gracious and pleasing has delighted his grandmother. The Prince of Wales surpassed himself in his attempts to make everything go off well, and succeeded marvelously. The visit of the German Emperor to East Ney barracks was no mere royal parade such as is usual in this country. He had evidently made up his mind to see all that was to be seen, and his indefatigable energy poking into all parts of soldiers' quarters was too much even for the Prince of Wales. It cannot be denied that the Kaiser showed rare determination to mark, learn and inwardly digest. One of his official attendants, acting under imperial orders, tested the pork pie. Another member of the staff was selected to sample the quality of the beer served at the English canteen, and the Emperor himself purchased a screw of tobacco. There was ample food for reflection in the thoroughness of the imperial democratic inspection. Such interest in the details of the everyday life of common people can hardly fail to be repaid by the affection of common people.

A great deal of nonsense has been printed about the Emperor William's alleged reluctance to visit London. The real fact is that as the Emperor's engagements prevented him from coming to England until the beginning of August, when the season is over, there never was any idea of his visiting London. I understand, however, that next year the Emperor proposes to visit England in June, when he is to stay a week at Buckingham Palace, and is also to be the Queen's guest at Windsor Castle. It is exceedingly probable that His Majesty will arrange his visit so as to be here for Ascot.

The Archduchess Valerie received a dowry of 3,000,000 florins from her parents on her marriage. She is entitled to an income from the State of about 80,000 florins a year as a daughter of the Emperor.

There is to be one more American princess, Miss Hollingsworth. The prince she is to marry is Prince Dardeck, a grandson of the Prince of Hesse.

Major Colville will, it is understood, retain the appointment of Military Secretary to Lord Stanley of Preston at Ottawa.

Gladstone, accompanied by Mrs. Gladstone and Mrs. Henry Gladstone, has gone to Hawarden. He will remain there till he goes to Scotland for the autumn campaign.

The cowardly persecution of Mrs. Mackay by anonymous assailants continues, and only a few days ago a fresh batch of type-written libels were sent broadcast to nearly the whole of her friends and acquaintances. It almost looks as if her visiting list had been used for this systematic diffusion of slanders. Detectives and experts employed by her solicitor have been unremitting in their efforts to trace the offenders, and I hear that a clue at last has been obtained. If the suspicions are confirmed a criminal libel case of extraordinary interest on both sides of the Atlantic may be confidently expected.

Sir George Campbell has succeeded in giving himself an appropriate nickname. He was describing himself the other night as a devoted guerrilla hanging on the rear of the Government. He pronounced the word, however, "gorilla," and he is now known under that name. Sir George Campbell will be known as "the devoted gorilla" as long as he sits in Parliament.

There is a growing impression on the Conservative side of the House that should Mr. Smith be unable to retain the position, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach will lead the House during the remainder of this Parliament.

OH! SAY CAN YOU SEE?

The Stars and Stripes Hauled Down in Salvador—The "Incident Terminated."

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Friday the state department received a telegram from Minister Misener at La Libertad saying that during a battle in the City of San Salvador the forces of the provisional government seized the United States consulate in that city, hauled down the flag and damaged the property. The department instructed Mr. Misener to demand full reparation and to see that all rights of the United States and its citizens were observed.

Last night the department received word from Mr. Misener that the provisional government of San Salvador had hoisted our flag over the United States Consulate the day before, at the same time saluting it with 21 guns, and the consul had been reinstated and the rights of the United States and its citizens were guaranteed.

THE GRENS BAND FIRST.

Close of the Hamilton Tournament—The First-Class Competition.

HAMILTON, Aug. 12.—To-day was the second and closing day of the band tournament. A good sized audience again assembled at Dundurn Park this afternoon to hear the competing first-class bands, the competitors being the Royal Grenadiers' band of Toronto, 29th Battalion band of Berlin and Waterloo Musical Society band of Waterloo. Mr. F. N. Innes of the 13th Regiment band of New York announced his decision as sole judge this evening, giving first place to the Grenadiers of Toronto, Waterloo second, and Berlin third.

DR. TANNER'S TONGUE.

HE CALLS TH[illegible]TARY A SKUNK.

A Lively Passage at Arms in the House of Commons—The Member for Cork Compelled to Apologise—Cholera's Victims.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—One hundred and seventeen persons died from cholera in Mecca yesterday. In Jeddah 79 died.

There was an exciting scene in the House of Commons this evening. Home Secretary Matthews was replying to speakers who had censured his dealings in capital sentences, when Dr. Tanner, member for Cork, broke in with "How about Dungarvan?"

Mr. Matthews retorted: "I don't know who that vulgar interrupter is."

Mr. Tanner appealed to the chairman, who guardedly justified Mr. Matthews' language.

Mr. Tanner thereupon shouted at the top of his voice: "Mr. Matthews is the meanest and lowest skunk that ever sat on the treasury bench!"

The chairman called upon Mr. Tanner to withdraw the expression and to apologise.

Mr. Tanner at first refused to do so unless Mr. Matthews also apologised, but finally on the advice of Mr. Sexton he made an apology.

A Fight in the Carolines.

MADRID, Aug. 12.—Natives of Yap on one of the Caroline Islands recently attacked an unarmed detachment of the Spanish garrison which was at work cutting wood in a forest. Of the Spaniards one lieutenant and 27 soldiers were killed and the rest escaped. The Governor of the Carolines sent a steamer to Yap to punish the natives. The steamer grounded en route to the Island and two boats of troops sent to attack the natives met with such resistance that they were compelled to retire. The Home Government has now telegraphed to the Governor of the Philippine Islands to send man-of-war to the scene.

A Parade at Berlin.

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—The autumn parade of guards was held to-day. The Emperor and Empress and the princes of the imperial family were present. The Emperor rode back to the schloss at the head of the color company. He received an ovation from the thousands of spectators.

SHE CLAIMS SIX MILLIONS.

A Notorious Woman Says She is the Widow of Millionaire Davis.

EAST SAGINAW, Mich., Aug. 12.—Mrs. A. J. Davis, who is a claimant for the $6,000,000 estate left by A. J. Davis, the Helena (Mont.) capitalist, is a notorious character of this city. She is a well preserved woman of 55, and has for 20 years been the proprietress of a resort here. She has a son, Eugene, who has served a term in the penitentiary for embezzlement.

She tells a straightforward story to the effect that in 1850 she was married to Andrew J. Davis, by the Rev. Mr. Bruce, at Hudson, Me. In 1852 Davis deserted her. She traced him to Port Huron, Mich., where he was engaged as a bridge contractor, and afterwards to Cedar Rapids, Ia., where she joined him only to be again deserted. She found that he went to Pike's Peak, but could get no definite knowledge of him and never saw him again. She married once since her residence here, but lived with her husband only a short time, resuming the name of Davis. She will make a hard fight for her share of the big estate.

CUT HER THROAT.

Suicide of An Old Lady at London, Ont.—Crazed by La Grippe.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 12.—Mrs. Jane Wheeler, aged 65 years, and mother of Frank C. Wheeler, hardware merchant of this city, was found dead in bed this morning by her son Charles Wheeler, with her throat cut from ear to ear. The wound was self-inflicted with a razor. The old lady was a sufferer from la grippe last winter and to the mental effects of that disease may be attributed her death.

Ned Crane in the Toils.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Big Ed Crane, the pitcher of the New York (P. L.) Club, was a prisoner in the Harlem Police Court yesterday morning, charged with threatening to shoot Policeman Kane of the Twenty-ninth Precinct when the latter attempted to arrest the bartender of McKeon's saloon, situated in Third-avenue, near One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street. Matthew Kiernan, aged 28 years, formerly in the employ of the McKeons, became involved in a dispute at 3 o'clock yesterday morning in the saloon with a bystander. A fight followed during which Kiernan was cut with a knife. He called in Policeman Kane to arrest his assailant, likewise the bartender, and as the officer was making the arrest Crane protested, and when Kane threatened to take him along Crane said he would shoot him if he did. Justice Murray fined Crane $10 and Kiernan $10. Crane gave the name of James Hennessy.

A Swimming Record Broken.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—W. C. Johnson of the Manhattan Athletic Club, amateur champion 100-yard swimmer of the United States, broke the 100-yard swimming record yesterday afternoon at Locust Point, near Bensonhurst, L. I. Johnson was started by S. D. See, Pastime A. C. Robert Stall, New York A. C., and Mortimer Bishop, Staten Island A. C., held the watches, and William B. Curtis, New York A. C., acted as referee. Johnson was followed by a four and an eight-oared crew from the Varuna Boat Club, and they noticed that the swimmer was making great headway. He covered the 100 yards in 1m. 15 1-5s., which beats by a full second the record established by H. Braun, at Travers Island, N.Y., Aug. 25, 1888.

The Buenos Ayres Rag Baby.

BUENOS AYRES, Aug. 12.—A great procession took place yesterday in honor of President Alem of the Union Civica, who took a prominent part in the overthrow of the Celman Government.

It is proposed to distribute the issue of 100,000,000 paper dollars as follows: National Bank $30,000,000, Government $20,000,000, municipality $20,000,000, Mortgage Bank $30,000,000. Gold is quoted at 151. The money market is improving.

Celman will start for Europe shortly.

A mob attacked the residence of ex-President Celman and threatened to burn it. The Government has placed a cordon of troops around the house for its protection.

The Foresters' High Court.

GUELPH, Aug. 12.—Brockville has been selected for the next meeting of the High Court of the Independent Order of Foresters—to take place the second Tuesday in August, 1891. The reports presented to-day showed the order to be in a flourishing condition.

Anxious to Suit.

Fakir—Neckties, suspenders—

Fakir—Vell, I haf so[illegible] for 10 cents mister.—Texas Siftings.

HE WILL NOT ACCEPT.

Mr. Wiman Declines Four Nominations for the Commons.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Mr. Erastus Wiman had much to say yesterday concerning the report that he would try to become a Canadian member of Parliament at the coming elections. Four Liberal constituencies, he said, had offered him their nominations, but his business interests as well as his preference to live in New York had prevented him from accepting any one of them. The coming election, he said, will have most far-reaching consequences and its significance has been intensified by the probable passage of the McKinley Tariff Bill, which would shut from the near-by markets of the United States half of the Canadian export of natural products.

Three cents duty per head on cabbage is the extremest form of exaction that has been enforced by one country against another for an article of which pauper labor formed no part, and so for five cents per dozen on eggs, $4 per ton on hay and every other article the farmer produced. There is only one hope for the Canadian producer and that is a reciprocity that would admit American manufactures free in exchange for Canada's natural products. To achieve this result is the aim of the Liberal party, and although I cannot occupy the position of leader I hope by voice and pen to contribute to its triumph.

Mr. Wiman then took up the subject of the conflict of interests between the American and Canadian railroads and the significance of the coming elections for settlement of the problem. Unrestricted reciprocity, he said, is the only way in which the international transportation question can be settled.

UNDER SENTENCE OF DEATH.

The Prisoners Awaiting the Fatal Wire and Their Crimes.

ALBANY, N.Y., Aug. 12.—There are now five prisoners under sentence of death in the various prisons of this State, the majority of them being in Sing Sing. Tchihiok Jugigo, James J. Slocum, Joseph Woods and Nicola Trezza occupy "Murderers' Row" in that prison under the charge of special keepers. In all the cases which have not already been to the court of last resort appeals are to be taken immediately. "Among the officers at Sing Sing," said an officer of that prison, "much sympathy exists for Tchihiok Jugigo, the Japanese sailor. He is a quiet and inoffensive prisoner, and the belief has gained ground that the whole truth has not been told by the witnesses on his trial. He, however, acknowledges the killing of his comrade, Commi, but claims that it was done in self-defence." Woods is a negro, aged 28. He murdered a fellow laborer in a quarrel June 20, 1889. Slocum is an ex-baseball player and murdered his wife last New Year's Eve.

Horace A. Smiler, the only one of the doomed men not in Sing Sing, is now in the New York Tombs. He murdered Maggie Bisney, his third wife, April 3, 1889. He had been living alternately with his victim and his second wife, neither of whom knew of the other's existence.

There are about 25 other murderers awaiting trial under the electrical execution law.

SALVATOR WINS AGAIN.

The Pulsifer Colt Four Lengths Behind Haggins' Horse.

MONMOUTH PARK, Aug. 12.—About 20,000 people witnessed the races here to-day. Every horseman of any prominence in the country was present, attracted by the Junior Champion and Champion Stakes. The weather was magnificent and the track, while not absolutely fast, was in good shape. Results:

First race, ¾ mile—Meriden 1, My Fellow 2, Bellwood 3. Time 1.39.

Second race, Junior Championship Stakes, for 2-year-olds, $10,000 added, ¾ mile—Strathmeath 1, Sallie McClelland 2, Potomac 3. Time 1.16¾. This was one of the prettiest races ever seen. The flag fell at the second attempt with Sallie McClelland, Strathmeath and Ambulance in front. Ambulance led by a neck for a quarter and then gave way to Potomac, who came up from fifth place. Ambulance again showed in front at the ½ mile post, while Potomac was second, a length and a half before Sallie McClelland. The last named had the command within a furlong from home only by a head from Potomac, who led Strathmeath half a length. Murphy rode desperately in the last few jumps and snatched the victory from Sallie McClelland by the shortest of noses. Potomac was third, only a nose behind. Then came Rey del Rey half a length away, followed by Russell, Ambulance, Kildeer, Long Fortune, Sorcerer, Bermuda, Homer, Surplus, Balgowan, Fairview, Bolero, High Tariff, Sirocco, Fireworks and Kingsman.

Third race, The Champion Stakes, $3500 added, 1½ miles—Only Salvator and Tenny started. At the start Salvator's nose showed in front on the outside and he was under a double pull. For 5 furlongs they ran in this order. Then as they struck the turn for home Garrison let out a link on Tenny and he shot to the front, getting a lead of half a length. Murphy at once sent Salvator after him and when they rounded into the stretch he was at the little swayback's neck. From that point to within 3 furlongs of home it was a pretty race. All of a sudden Murphy commenced to ride Salvator and the shout went up, "Tenny is beaten." It was true. When Murphy found he had Tenny beaten he eased Salvator, and Garrison did the same thing. It was a tame finish, Salvator winning by four good lengths. Time 2.35½.

Fourth race, ¾ mile—Aella colt 1, Vanity 2, Miletus 3. Time 1.19.

Fifth race, 1⅛ miles—Eurus 1, Eric 2, Sluggard 3. Time 1.55¾.

Sixth race, 1 mile—Grey Dawn 1, Arab 2, Sam Wood 3. Time 1.43¾.

Shot By a Wronged Husband.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Dr. O. Sawyer was shot and probably killed to-day by J. Barton Sancher, who claims to be a correspondent of The Chicago Horseman. The trouble was brought about by the alleged intimacy between the doctor and Sancher's wife. Sancher, who is locked up, claims to have secured confessions of the intimacy from both his wife and the doctor. The shooting was done in a fight growing out of the doctor's refusal to put his confession in writing.

The Erie Buys a Chicago Entrance.

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 12.—The Chicago and Atlantic Railway was to-day sold to Drexel, Morgan & Co. of New York for $5,000,000. The purchase was made in the interest of the Erie Railroad, and will give that road an entrance into Chicago.

To Give Women the Ballot.

WASHINGTON, Aug. [illegible].—Senator Blair, in behalf of the majority of the members of the Woman Suffrage Committee, to-day reported favorably a proposed constitutional amendment to give women the right of suffrage.

THE WORLD OF LABOR.

NEW YORK CENTRAL TRAINS AGAIN RUNNING.

The Road Claims To Have Won a Complete Victory—The Big Tie-up in Wales—Westinghouse Machinists at Pittsburg Strike for a 9-Hour Day.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Affairs at the Central's freight depot here are assuming their normal condition. Freight, it is expected, will be received by the road in the morning. The men still talk confidently of victory.

ROCHESTER, Aug. 12.—All trains on the Central-Hudson passed through this city nearly on time to-day. Freight trains are moving east and west.

Returned to Work.

FONDA, N.Y., Aug. 12.—The New York Central switchmen and baggage masters here who went on strike have with one exception returned to work.

Powderly Will not Talk.

BUFFALO, Aug. 12.—T. V. Powderly passed through Buffalo to-night to attend a meeting of the General Executive Committee of the K. of L. He refused to discuss the strike.

UP GO EGGS, FRUIT AND MILK.

Delay in Transportation Raises the Price of Provisions.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Prices of some kinds of provisions have already been affected by the strike. At the Mercantile Exchange yesterday the price of eggs advanced to 18½ and 19 cents. They were 17 cents on Saturday. The price of fancy butter also went up half a cent. Cheese is also likely to be higher if the strike continues. As trade in cheese is mostly for export and the quantity used in home consumption is small that is not an important item to the general public. The effect, though, will be to send cheese for shipment to Montreal which otherwise would have come here.

Pears sold for the highest prices they ever brought in this market. Two carloads of 800 boxes sold for an average of $4.80 apiece. The highest figure was $5 a box for 180 boxes. Peaches and plums also advanced and the price of milk went up a cent a quart.

THE STRIKE IN WALES.

Trade Completely Paralyzed—John Burns Goes to Help the Strikers.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—John Burns, the labor agitator, has gone to Wales to assist in carrying out the great strike. No words can exaggerate the state of the complete paralysis of trade of all sorts in Wales. Huge collier sailing vessels and steamers and great ocean liners are lying at the docks in absolute idleness, for there is not a ton of coal in sight to put into them. Meanwhile, from the adjoining districts, such as those accustomed to come by the now idle railways, come complaints of shortness in the supply of provisions, diminished and dwindling trade, as well as grave personal inconvenience of the inhabitants. The markets are deserted and the district is filled with police, while the military is held in readiness for any emergencies all along different points of the line.

Australia's Shipping Trade Threatened.

MELBOURNE, Aug. 12.—A complete suspension of the shipping trade of Australia is threatened in consequence of the demands of the Marine Officers' Association for an increase of pay. The seamen's union, the dockmen's union and other trade societies support the marine officers, and the situation is made worse by the action of the shearers' union, which demands that shippers shall refuse to handle non-unionist wool.

Machinists Demand 9 Hours.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 12.—The strike of machinists for a 9-hour day is spreading and about 3000 men are now idle. The principal fight seems to be against the Westinghouse interests and by to-morrow it is said all the employes of Westinghouse, numbering 4000, will be out. This will cause a suspension of work at the Westinghouse Electric Company's works, Westinghouse Machine Company, Westinghouse Air Brake Company and Union Switch and Signal Company. The demands of the men have been conceded at a number of shops and work has been resumed.

TORONTO TOPICS.

Lord Stanley and Prince George to Be Invited to the Exposition.

TORONTO, Aug. 13.—The Toronto Industrial Exhibition Association has decided to invite Lord Stanley and Prince George to visit the show during the week after it opens in September.

Last evening while J. J. Withrow, a prominent manufacturer, was out driving his horse ran away. He held it so firmly that it stopped running and began to kick. It kicked through the dashboard and broke his right knee-cap in three places.

Jumbo Campbell, the park orator, went to the police headquarters yesterday morning and complained that the plate glass window in his store in Queen-street had been broken by some one who threw a stone at it about 3 o'clock in the morning. This is the second time his window has been broken. Campbell is the man who was arrested on a charge of using indecent and insulting language in the Queen's Park, after his repeated abuse of Roman Catholics there on Sunday afternoon and there is a good deal of feeling against him.

The strike of employes on the New York Central has not materially affected the local trade, merchants say. As neither the Grand Trunk nor Canadian Pacific are directly affected, arrangements were perfected early in the trouble to transfer all cars laden with Canadian freight to branches of these lines, and the only inconvenience merchants will be put to is a delay of a few hours in the receipt of their goods, or in the arrival of shipments at points in the Eastern States.

Shortly before noon yesterday an accident occurred which may result in a charge of manslaughter against Adrian Elliott, who drives for Fred Doane, the Yonge-street livery man. The injured man, William Brown, was working on the new pavement at Yonge and Breadalbane-streets and was assisted by two other men backing up a wagon. Brown had the tongue against his abdomen, when Elliott, who was driving a Victoria, crossed to the wrong side of the street and endeavored to get past but collided against Elliott, jambing the tongue of the wagon into the man's stomach. He was conveyed to his brother-in-law's residence, John Gibson, at 812 Yonge-street, where he lies in a critical condition.

The Ottawa Electric Street Railway.

OTTAWA, Aug. 13.—The Street Railway Committee met the Howland syndicate solicitor this evening and by mutual concession agreed to almost all details. The questions between the two parties are smoothed down and it is probable the Howland offer to build the electric street railway will be accepted to-morrow.

Niagara Again Votes for Waterworks.

POVERTY TO AFFLUENCE.

REFRESHING STREAM OF THE MILK OF HUMAN KINDNESS.

An Unpleasant Experience With a Happy Ending—Rescued From Starvation and Showered with Gold.

The following story taken from the Richmond County Democrat, N. Y. State, is not only touching and pathetic in many points, but the mention of the young school teacher of Lindsay gives it an additional tinge of local interest outside of the circumstances themselves. The young man whose tale of woe and after good fortune is related is surmised by some to be a certain young school teacher who left Lindsay on a Sunday evening rather unceremoniously. The Democrat's narrative is as follows:—

The Democrat last Saturday contained a brief but fervid appeal for assistance for a suffering family located at 15 Canal-st., Stapleton. Thereby hangs a tale which is as rare as it is touching and refreshing, and proves that this old world is not so cold and unsympathetic as it is claimed to be.

In February last a young man, whose name is withheld because of the circumstances, gave up the school he was teaching, which was the source of the income with which he supported his family, consisting of wife, two children and mother-in-law, near the town of Lindsay, Upper Canada. Pneumonia had left him so weak that the vigorous climate was too much for him and a change was prescribed as the only thing that would prolong his life. Like many another he looked to the great metropolis as the place where he would be most likely to find employment for himself and his wife and mother-in-law, both of whom are expert needlewomen. So hither they came, reaching the city with $25 in cash, a sewing machine and scanty personal effects.

The young husband found a cheap room in a cheap street of Brooklyn and the family lived there about two weeks. They searched constantly for work but found that while there was plenty of work going on there were far more than enough to do it and they began to realize that it is a very difficult task for inexperienced people from rural districts to obtain a foothold.

Their little hoard of money gave out and they pawned the sewing machine, the wedding rings of the wife and mother-in-law and whatever else would bring a little money, and went to a still cheaper room in Thames-st., New York. Here they remained for a week, living upon a scant allowance of crackers and cheese, and finally with the last bit of money they came to Staten Island and the young man paid his last $3 for the rent of two damp, squalid and barren rooms at 15 Canal-st., Stapleton, of which the family took possession without a chair to sit on or a bed to lie upon, and nothing whatever to eat. They were proud and would not let their circumstances be known until the little boy, aged 5, begged so piteously for food the grandmother's pride was overcome by love and pity and she went out and begged food for the little one. Her begging led to the discovery of the condition of the family.

The same day that the appeal was printed in the Democrat the case was reported in the New York Times and the result of the publicity thus given has been astonishing. Subscriptions began pouring in and by Saturday evening there was $700 in hand for the family. Early in the day a dainty little lady picked her way through Canal-st. and found the number. She entered and delicately announced her errand of mercy. First she knelt upon the bare and dirty floor and offered up a fervent prayer, then she added a few words of comfort, slipped a roll of bills into the mother's hand and turned to go. "Who are you? to whom do we owe this unexpected blessing and relief?" was the eager question, and soft and swift came the modest reply: "A daughter of the King." Other ladies followed and ministered in various ways and the family was made comparatively comfortable before they received any of the newspaper contributions. Later in the day a gentleman came over from the city and said he could give the young man a position as time keeper in a Providence (R. I.) factory; and when she heard this one of the many ministering angles said she had many wealthy and charitable friends there who would supply the woman with an adundance of needlework.

On Monday the donation fund had passed the $1000 mark and many gifts had reached the family without being recorded. The young man is now in Providence at work and arranging a home for his family and—"all's well that ends well."

Will Not Delay Again.

The delay in getting the alarm into the fire station last night at the time of th fatal fire on Dalhousie-st., was caused by the failure of the parties wishing to send the alarm to find the key. To obviate this in the future Manager Kent, of the Bell Telephone Co., is making improvements in the boxes to-day. A glass front is being placed in the boxes so that when an alarm is to be sounded a person will only have to break the glass and ring. There will be no fear of a delay in getting the key hereafter.

They Inspected the Sites.

The gentlemen who were here yesterday representing the manufacturing concern which contemplates locating here remained all day yesterday. The visitors inspected several sites and seemed much pleased with the town's advantages.

THE CIVIC HOLIDAY.

It Will be a Day of Excursions—Six on the List.

To-morrow will be Peterborough's civic holiday, in accordance with the Town Council's resolution and the Mayor's proclamation. As is usual, there will be a number of excursions, no less than six, and if the weather is fine the town will be nearly deserted.

THE FORESTERS.

Court Little John C.O.F. has arranged for an excursion per C.P.R. and steamers to Toronto, Niagara Falls and to Buffalo, N.Y. The magnificent falls—one of the wonders of the world in which nature is exhibited in her grandest aspect—are always an attraction for persons wishing an outing, and no doubt many will accompany the members of Court Little John. Buffalo is a city well worth visiting, as it is one of the progressive cities of New York state.

THE SONS OF ENGLAND.

The Sons of England have charge of an excursion over the Grand Trunk to Toronto, Niagara Falls and Buffalo. Different routes are offered by this excursion, as the excursionist may go by Lindsay to Toronto and take in the northern scenes, or may go via Port Hope by the lake shore route and have the Lake Ontario breezes all the way, or go one way and return the other. The Queen City, the wonderful falls, and the Queen city of New Yorke state will receive many visitors by this excursion, as Lindsay and Campbellford have united with Peterborough lodge in promoting it.

TO THE CITY OF THE BAY.

The C. M. B. A. and E. B. A. have jointly arranged for an excursion to Belleville. The City of the Bay also has an attraction for Peterborough people and the promoters of the excursion have arranged for a programme of sports there. The Cricket club will also play a match with the club of that city. The great work of bridging the Bay of Quinte, now going on, will be an interesting sight, and this excursion will doubtless be well patronized.

THE CIRCLE OF THE LAKES.

The Royal Templars excursion will be from Peterborough to Peterborough via Chemong and Lakefield, through the beautiful chain of lakes north of here, by the Grand Trunk and palace steamer Alice Ethel—an excursion over a new and very attractive route.

THE JUBILEE POINT.

The Sons of Canada will run an excursion on the steamer Golden Eye to Jubilee Point. This is a popular as well as an attractive picnic resort and the sail down the river is a most enjoyable one. The route is known as a never-failing source of pleasure.

TO STONY LAKE.

There will be an excursion to Stony Lake under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. band per Grand Trunk and popular steamer Cruiser. The beautiful lake will be sailed through, and Juniper Island, where the Y.M.C.A. camp is being held, will be the objective point. Stony Lake excursions are always well patronized and this one will not be an exception.

CAMPED ON JUNIPER.

Meetings of the Y.M.C.A. at Stony Lake—Interesting Times.

JUNIPER ISLAND, STONY LAKE, Y.M.C.A. CAMP.

During the week Bible readings have been given by Rev. Mr. Roper, Messrs. Cole and Williams. They proved very profitable. Saturday morning a conference on Association work was held. In the evening at the camp fire Rev. Mr. Roper gave a very interesting and instructive talk on the "Geology of Stony Lake" imparting much useful information.

Sabbath morning Rev. W. M. Roper preached from Roman's, 12 1-2. The sermon was full of practical lessons and was listened too with much profit to all present.

In the afternoon Mr. Cole conducted a Gospel service at Mr. Thomas Bradburn's cottage, Boschink. Owing to the stormy weather the attendance was small, in fact it looked as if it would be impossible for any one to reach there. At sundown a rain storm set in and prevented the camp fire service arranged for the evening.

Bible readings will be given each day during the week at 10 a.m. On Tuesday evening, "A Musicale" will be held weather permitting. vocal selections will be given by "Harmony Camp" and others, Mr. T. S. Cole will give several recitations. We hope to have a pleasant and profitable time.

On Thursday afternoon, Civic Holliday "on the occasion of the Y.M.C.A. band excursion," a afternoon meeting will be held. Selections will be given by the band and short addresses. We have now fourteen of our boys encamped on the island. All are enjoying their outing immensely. if the weather was not so squally, it would be a perfect holiday.

The store is doing a rushing business. There is far more people here than last year.

Fish is plentiful, Messrs. Mannell and Bradley have just caught a fine lunge. More anon.

The Judge's Commendation.

The 57th band returned from Hamilton last evening and played from the station up the street to the corner of Hunter-st. and then escorted their "mascot," the large mastiff driven by Harold Snowden, to the Snowden House. The band is satisfied that the judge acted impartially and the members are pleased with the treatment they received in the Ambitious city. They enjoyed their visit, although, of course, they would have been better pleased had they won a better prize. A protest was made against the Bowmanville band, as having a larger number of members than twenty-five, but as they had less than that number in the contest, their best players, the rules were complied with. In giving his judgment, Mr. Innes, of Brooklyn, said:—"I want to say, without an intention to flatter, that the performances of the bands engaged in this contest have surprised me. I am free to say that I consider them able to hold their own in competition with any similar class of bands under the sun. Those who have not won prizes will probably feel towards me as do the losing baseball club towards the umpire; but I can assure them that they have been judged impartially and conscientiously. I desire to say that all the bands have been judged on their rendition of their first number, the second piece in each case, where played, being of such a character as to make no change at all in my idea regarding the band. Where the performances of two bands were, in my opinion, of equal merit, I have given the advantage to that band whose selection was the better composition. My decisions may be considered revolutionary, but I have judged from a musical standpoint, not giving the prize always to the strongest-lunged. A case in point: Band No. 8 played in ensemble more artistically than No. 2, but did not possess enough solo talent to outweigh the ensemble playing and solo work of that band."

A Whole Indiana County Blown Up.

SHELBYVILLE, Ind., Aug. 12.—At 9 o'clock yesterday morning the farmers near Waldron, this county, were startled by a terrific explosion. When they reached the Ogden Graveyard, which is on a bluff near the Flat Rock stream, they discovered that fully 10 acres of the earth was in a commotion. Geysers were shooting up to the height of six and eight feet, and gas was blazing from ten to fifteen feet above the water of the geysers. The river bed was torn up and the water had stopped running below the graveyard. Flames are still shooting from fifty different fissures in the earth. The county had not been considered in the gas belt, although local companies have sunk wells. The skeletons of the dead can be distinctly seen in the fractures of the earth. Gas flows freely from the entire surface of the ten acres. Stones were thrown two miles. The whole county was shaken up, and the excitement is tremendous.

The Cause of Poor Radish Seed.

It is stated, upon what seems good authority, as well as good sense, that the poor quality of radish seed that comes to our market is the result of saving the seed from stocks that have not been transplanted. This story however plausible it may appear, is in no respect true. The true state of the case is, all the radish seeds which come to our country are grown from transplanted roots. The growers would not produce them in any other way; the seeds are sown in seed-beds, quite closely, and, when fit for the table, they are transplanted into the field. They are first grown in seed-beds for economic reasons, as a given amount of seed-bed will furnish roots that will plant at least fifty times as much ground as the seed-bed contains. This enables the growers to economize time and labor. Much of the seed grown in France is raised by small farmers, who do all their farm-work by hand

What Do You Keep Poultry For?

Some farmers ignore profits in keeping hens. They want simply enough to supply their table with eggs and broilers. Others aim for profit as well. Market poultry is the foundation of the poultry business, as pork is the foundation of fancy breeds of hogs. Like any other business, it requires knowledge and experience. One who is without experience should try a small number, learn to care for them and study the wants and characteristics of each fowl. He will then be able to increase his flock. Pleasure is a secondary aim if the aim is to make a business of poultry keeping. Every farmer should keep a few fowls; they can be cared for with little attention, when a large flock always means work to the owner.

Why is it?

Reasons why the Sons of Canada picnic is the one to take in:—Because it is the cheapest, tickets 50c., children 25c.; because it is a delightful trip, no smoke and cinders, lots of fresh air and sunshine; because Doucet's orchestra will furnish music; because there is good fishing and canoes will be carried free; because there is a ladies' solid silver watch and chain to be drawn for; because there will be lots of fun and enjoyment; because you are all sons and daughters of Canada; because the committee will furnish tea and hot water free and look after your baskets; because meals on boat and at hotel are only 25c.; because we do as we advertise. TEE RELIEF OF DERRY.

A CELEBRATION OF THE ANNIVERSARY AT NORWOOD.

A Number of Orange and True Blue Lodges in Procession—Speaking in a Grove—The 'Prentice Boys at Belleville.

The anniversary of the relief of Derry was celebrated in Norwood yesterday by the True Blues and Orangemen of the district, the arrangements having been in charge of the True Blues of the village. The Peterborough brethren went to Norwood on a special train in the forenoon, which also had on board the Pontypool True Blues and a number of people from sections west of here. At the Norwood station the western lodges were met by the brethren of Norwood, Belmont and Dummer, and escorted over the hill to the village. After marching up Peterborough-st. the members of the lodges dispersed for dinner, for which ample provision had been made at the hotels, and by the ladies of the Methodist church, and by the True Blues in the town hall.

When the procession was again formed after dinner the streets were well filled with people who had come to witness the demonstration. The procession was formed at the corner of Peterborough and Colborne-sts. in the following order:—

Bros. Geo. Kemp and W. J. Stephenson, marshals.
Union Jack.
Smith Brass Band.
Black Preceptory.
L.O.L. No. 457, Nassau.
L.O.L. No. 49, Peterborough.
L.O.L. No. 89, Peterborough.
Fife and Drum Band.
L.O.L. No. 277, Belmont.
Fife and Drum Band.
L.O.L. No. 522, South Dummer.
Fife and Drum Band.
L.O.L. No. 1356, Mairton.
L.O.L. No. 34, Norwood.
Pontypool Fife and Drum Band.
Junior True Blues, Pontypool.
Purple Star Lodge, L.T.B., Pontypool.
Peterborough Fife and Drum Band.
Junior True Blues, Peterborough.
King William Lodge, L.T.B., Peterborough.
Norwood Brass Band.
Junior True Blues, Norwood.
Norwood Lodge, Loyal True Blues.
Bros. Woods and Andrews, Marshals.

In addition there were representatives present of Victoria, Campbellford, Cobourg and other lodges. The procession was a long one and looked well. The True Blues' uniform is an attractive one, and the juniors looked particularly neat, while most of the Orange lodges were in uniform.

The procession passed through the streets leading to Grover's woods, a beautiful grove on the outskirts of the village. In the grove a platform had been erected for speaking, and it was the centre of attraction during the remainder of the afternoon. Bro. Alex. Hamilton, County Master of West Peterborough, was chairman and had with him on the platform several prominent members of the order.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings, said that the True Blues of Norwood had reason to be gratified with the attendance, especially considering that this was harvest time and as it was just a month since they had met on July 12th. They had assembled to celebrate the relief of Derry, and it was an event worthy of being celebrated, and to that and other events of that time they owed much. He had seen the walls of that city and described them.

Mr. HUGH DRAIN, in a short speech, described some of the hardships which the besieged in Derry suffered. Those present in uniform, he said, were sons of such sires and they would stand as firmly for their principles. He referred to incidents in life in Ireland and closed with an application of their lessons.

Mr. A. B. ANDERSON, P.C.M., said he had been on an Orange platform every year for many years, but this was the first time he had had the privilege of celebrating the relief of Derry. It was right to commemorate such days, for in doing so they were but following the instructions the Almighty had given to the children of Israel. He dwelt upon the importance of the act performed by the 'prentice boys in closing the gates of Derry, and closed with a touching reference to the death of Rev. W. M. Pattyson.

Mr. R. WEIR, Grand Master of the Royal Black Knight Preceptory, said that at the time of every crisis in the history of civilization or religion a deliverer arose, and he quoted illustrations of this from history. He referred to the power and glories of the British Empire and the liberty and enlightenment of its people, and attributed them to the open Bible. He paid a tribute to the defenders of Derry, and recalled events following the relief of the city. There was need, he argued, for Orangeism at this time and in this country.

Rev. J. S. CLARKE on rising called for three cheers for the Queen, and they were given with a will. So long as they could cheer for the Queen like that, he said, there was no cause to fear for the Queen or the English language. He complimented those who took part in the celebration on the orderly manner in which it had been conducted, and said that by carrying out that orderly demeanor they would receive strength. He referred to events in Canadian history to show the qualities and the usefulness of Orangemen, and urged them to continue to use their influence aright.

Rev. MR. PERRY, Grand Chaplain of Ontario West, was the last speaker. They had, he said, a great country, though some people did not seem to think so and made little of it while talking of commercial union and annexation. They had a country of immense area, with great island seas, water communication over 2,000 miles long, and great wealth in fisheries, forests, mines, oil and natural gas. God had blessed them as a country, and if its inhabitants remained loyal and true it would be more prosperous than ever. They had a great future before them. Canada was one of the grandest manufacturing countries of the world, and was also an agricultural country with fertile soil. He referred to the increase in the number of miles of railway in operation, to the post offices, newspapers, schools, banks, maritime position, increase of trade, public works, canals, Canadian Pacific, Grand Trunk and Intercolonial railways, and increasing opportunities for trade to show the progress the country had made. What they wanted to make their country more prosperous was more loyalty. They were here to commemorate great events. No association was more misrepresented than the Orange association. Its most important principles were taken from the Word of God. These principles were taken as the foundation of civil and religious liberty—they were eternal and would survive the crash of worlds. The association, he said, was necessary and was increasing in members and influence. He referred to the history of Derry, and spoke eloquently for some time, closing by urging them to uphold their principles to uphold the empire, and to uphold the Bible, and their future would be greater than their past.

After cheers for the Queen, Mr. Perry and the chairman, the lodges returned to the village. At 7 o'clock the Peterborough lodges boarded the special train and returned to town.

NOTES.

The magnificent new banner of Norwood Lodge of True Blues attracted much attention.

The lemonade and lunch booths seemed to do good business.

A quadruple arch was erected at the main corner of the village and flying flags were numerous.

The Day at Belleville.

The 'Prentice Boys who went to Belleville to participate in the celebration there arived home shortly after eight o'clock last evening. They had a great day in the city of the Bay. A telegraph despatch says:—Ten thousand visitors besieged the city to-day to participate in the 201st anniversary of the relief of Derry. The streets were ablaze with flags and gorgeously uniformed Orangemen who had come to the city from from all directions. At 10 o'clock the 'Prentice Boys formed at their assembly room and headed by the Oddfellows' and the military bands marched in a body to the wharf, where the visiting lodges from Picton, Deseronto and Napanee, accompanied by their bands, were received and escorted to the lodge room. The local society then proceeded to the G. T. R. depot, where the societies from Cobourg, Port Hope, Trenton and other western towns were met, with those which came in on the Midland from Lindsay, Peterborough, Madoc, Campbellford, etc. At 1 o'clock the societies formed on the market square, the Orangemen heading the procession, followed by the True Blues, with the 'Prentice Boys in the rear. The procession left the market square by Front-st. to Dundas, up Pinnacle to Upper Bridge, and thence down Front to Bridge, after which they marched to Exhibition Park, where a programme of athletic sports was carried out. There was an entire absence of rowdyism, and the processionists conducted themselves in a manner which reflected credit on them, and which will elevate them in the good estimation of the public. E. Roy won the mile bicycle race, John Gardner second and R. M. White third. The two-mile bicycle race was won in the same order. The hose reel race, 300 yards, between companies 1 and 2, G. T. R., was won by the latter in 54½ seconds. Belleville defeated Napanee in baseball by a score of 25 to 1 in eight innings.

ACKNOWLEDGES A SERIOUS CRIME.

William Northcott Arrested on a Charge of Attempted Train Wrecking—Admits that he Did it—His Head not Right.

A short, well built young fellow about twenty-one or twenty-two years of age, dressed in a rather shabby suit of brown checked tweed stood in the prisoner's box at the Police Court this morning with his head hanging down and a sort of simple, frightened expression on his well tanned countenance. This was William Northcott, a warrant for whose arrest on the charge of obstructing a train was sworn out yesterday by Detective Spence, of the G. T. R., as reported in the REVIEW last evening. The warrant was executed at Lakefield last night, and the young man, whose idiotic foolishness was supposed to have endangered the lives of so many persons who were travelling over the Lakefield road on the G.T.R. on Saturday last, was brought to town this morning. After swearing out the warrant Detective Spence went to Lakefield last night and accompanied Constable Campbell, of that place, to Northcott's father's house, where the arrest was made. As stated in the REVIEW last evening the young fellow is defective in his mental powers, and often leaves home for days at a time. Tuesday last he left and, as stated, was arrested here on Friday as a vagrant. Allowed to go the next morning he went out towards Lakefield and put the obstructions on the track, which have already been reported. On Saturday evening Constable Campbell met Northcot in the village and took him home where he remained until arrested last evening.

WHY HE DID IT.

When arrested the fellow, who is perhaps more to be pitied than anything else, acknowledged to the constable and detective that he had put the ties and rails on the track. When asked why he had done such a dastardly deed, he said he had seen two other fellows put ties on the rails a long time ago and he just did it to see the engine leave the track. When questioned about who the young fellows were whom he had seen put obstructions on the track, he gave the name of one but did not know the other's name. However, the veracity of this statement is greatly doubted, as no cases of attempted train wrecking had been reported until the three recent ones, of which Northcott admits he was the perpetrator.

On the way down from Lakefield Detective Spence had Constable Campbell and the prisoner get out on the track and the latter pointed out exactly the three places where the ties and rails had been placed on the track.

AT THE POLICE COURT

this morning County Magistrate Edmison was on the bench. Northcott stood in the prisoner's box with his head hung down and no efforts of the constables could make him look the court in the face. His manner decidedly pointed to a weak-mind. He again acknowledged that he had placed the obstructions on the track and when asked what had actuated him he told the same story he had when he was arrested. He said after he put the ties on the track he had sat on the fence a short distance away to watch the results. He did not want to wreck the train, he said, but wanted to see the engine run off.

The Magistrate remanded him for one week to allow him to consult counsel if he so desired.

The young man whom Northcott says he saw place the ties on the track some time ago, before harvest time as he said, had a quarrel with the prisoner some time ago. Northcott was accused by him of stealing his tobacco in the shanty and the affair resulted in Northcott getting his face slapped. This is thought to be how he came to draw the young man's name into this case.

DEATH IN THE FLAMES.

MARTIN O'MALLY MEETS AN AWFUL DEATH BY FIRE.

A Dwelling House Burned and a Victim Claimed by the Fire Fiend—A Narrow Escape for all the Family—A Sad Case.

Wrapt in a piece of oil cloth a charred and blackened trunk laid enclosed in a casket at M. McFadden's undertaking establishment on Hunter-st. this morning. There was no semblance of a human being in the blackened mass which a REVIEW reporter looked upon, yet that was all that was left of Martin O'Malley, a young Irishman, who yesterday was in the full vigor of the health and strength of manhood. The sight was a sickening one and told of a shocking fatality and the painful death by cremation which the young man had suffered in the flames which destroyed the house at the corner of Dalhousie and Water-sts., shortly before midnight last night.

The house where the fatality occurred was a rough cast dwelling which stood at the corner of Dalhousie and Wolfe-sts. In the house lived Mr. John McDonogh, his wife, son and daughter, the deceased and his wife and child, making seven persons in all. Last night the family all retired as usual and were sleeping the sleep of the weary after a day of labor when Mrs. McDonogh was AWAKENED BY A PECULIAR NOISE.

Arousing her husband, the latter jumped up just as the flames burst out in the rear part of the house. Mr. and Mrs. McDonogh were sleeping down stairs. To arouse those sleeping upstairs was the first thought of Mr. McDonough. Calling loudly for all to fly for their lives he ran upstairs and awakened everyone. The unfortunate O'Malley came down with his wife ahead of him and carrying his little child over his shoulder. So silently had the fire taken its hold and so rapid did it spread that the occupants of the house had to make their escape with no clothing but their sleeping attire. There was a delay in sending the alarm in to the fire station, so that when the brigade arrived a few minutes after the alarm had been struck the house was enveloped in flames. At this time it was not known that the fire had claimed a victim. A few minutes after their arrival the firemen had the fire well under control, and Firemen Sam Sharpe and W. Metheral with others were carrying a stream in over the ruins of the back kitchen when one of them noticed which was not at first recognized as that of a man. When it was seen that the unrecognizable heap was the remains of a human being the water was turned gently on them and in a few minutes the blackened trunk was rescued. It presented a shocking sight. The legs had been burned and washed away, the left arm was gone entirely, while only a little charred stump told where the right arm had been. The head was burned beyond all semblance to what it had been. The body alone told that the remains were those of a human being, although it was also badly charred. The body when found was lying within a few feet of where the door had been and it is surmised that the unfortunate man had just been coming out when the smoke overcame him or a falling timber or plank felled him to the floor. What took him back into the house after his escape with his wife and family is not known. All the money which he had was in the house and it is possible that he had returned upstairs to bring out the money and was caught just as he was coming out. Had his entry into the burning building been seen and his non-return noticed it is quite probable that a rescue would have been possible when the poor fellow was so close to the door. Another theory which seems to be probably the correct one, is that O'Malley went in at the front door and was trying to unlock the back one when he was overcome and burned. That the back door was not open was evident from the fact that the cat was found dead beside the body of the unfortunate man. But no one knew that Martin had gone into what proved to be his death trap and no one feared for his safety until the remains were found by the firemen.

THE BLACKENED BODY,

The grief of the young wife and the other occupants of the house was heart-rending when the ghastly discovery of the firemen was made and the truth of the husband's awful death came to them. The cries of Mr. McDonough when the awful truth was told him were pitiful to hear. The deceased was a young man of about 25 years of age and was well-liked by all who knew him. "Martin was a decent, hard-working fellow," remarked an acquaintance this morning to a reporter, "and his wife should receive much sympathy." He was married about three years ago and leaves one child. The funeral will take place this afternoon.

Mr. McDonough is also a sad sufferer by the fire, as all his worldly goods, clothing and money went up in smoke and he was left without enough to cover his body until a friend lent him an old suit of clothes. It was a disastrous fire, although the loss of property was small, and is the first fatality of the kind which has happened in the town for many years.

Mrs. Whelan owned the house, which was worth about $600. There was an insurance on the building.

The origin of the fire is unknown, although from the place it started it is supposed that it must have ignited in some way from the cook stove. This seems rather doubtful, however, as the fire had been out since six o'clock.

A second alarm was sounded about two o'clock this morning, the fire having been fanned into life again by the wind.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

"Ha! uttered the monk, starting back a pace and clenching his hands. "Does he mean that?"

"Oh, most truly he does!" the young countess replied; and spoke more firmly now, for there was something in the sudden energy of the monk's exclamation that gave her hope.

"Then he wants your estates, too. By my soul, he is aiming for wealth with a high hand. And do you suppose he fears Ruric Nevel in connection with this scheme?"

"Yes father—I will speak plainly, for I trust you. I do not think you would betray one who never harmed you."

"Let the end of these things tell you that. But now finish what you had begun—about your thoughts of the duke."

"He knows, holy father, that I love Ruric, and he knows too, that Ruric loves me. May he not, under such circumstances, fear that the noble youth will try to thwart him?"

"Very likely," returned Valdimir thoughtfully. "I will profit by this, and I am much mistaken if you do not also profit by it. I have those in Moscow who will work for me. I cannot, of course, directly assure you of salvation, for Ruric may never be found!"

A quick groan escaped from Claudia's lips as the monk thus spoke; but before Rosalind could speak the door of the apartment was opened, and the Duke of Tula strode in! He stopped as he came nigh to where the company stood, and his eyes flashed, and his frame trembled with passion.

"How now?" he cried, as soon as he could command speech. "What means this gathering here in my own palace? Meddling monk, how dare you drag your detestable form hither? Out, reptile! Out! And let me catch you here again and my dogs shall tear you up as they do carrion!"

Without a word the monk turned away. His face was pale as death, and his hands were clenched till the fingers' ends seemed to settle themselves into the palms.

"Remember," the duke exclaimed, as Valdimir reached the door, "if you dare to cross my doorstool again—"

"Hold!" gasped the monk, in a hoarse, startling tone. "Offer no more threats. But, mark me, proud duke,—you shall see the day on which you'll wish God had made you a dog ere he gave you speech to arouse the just vengeance of Valdimir!"

And thus speaking the black monk disappeared. Olga started to pursue him, but he did not follow out the impulse. Ere he reached the door he stopped and turned back.

"And you, woman, who art thou?" he uttered, turning an angry look upon Claudia.

"I am a mourning mother in search of her lost son," the woman sadly replied.

"Ha! I see the likeness now. You are the woman Nevel—mother of the young villain who bears that name! Leave my palace at once; and don't you dare to enter it again!"

The poor woman tried to speak, but she could not. With a deep sob she turned away, and slowly walked from the room.

"Now," resumed the duke, turning towards Rosalind, "what means this secret council?"

"My lord," returned the countess, struggling hard to overcome her powerful emotions, "they were here—to—to—"

But she could not finish the sentence. Her soul was too deeply moved. She only gave the foul wretch one look of horror and disgust, and then covering her face with her hands she sobbed aloud.

If the bad man had anything farther to say, he reserved it for some future time.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Count Conrad Damonoff was able to sit up. He was in a great stuffed chair, playing with a favorite dog, while near by him sat Stephen Urzen. The young nobleman had gained rapidly since the visit of Ruric, for the antidotes he had taken had proved efficient, and he soon came back to the point he had reached before the administering of the poison.

"Stephen," he said, pushing his dog gently from him, "has anything been heard yet from Ruric Nevel?"

"Not that I know of," returned Urzen.

"Oh, I wish I were able to assist in the search. But have you heard anything of what suspicions may be afloat?"

"Only that the humpbacked priest is looked upon by some as having a hand in it."

"Ha—and how does suspicion point toward him?"

"Why—in no direct way, I believe. I can not understand it. All I know is, he is suspected."

The count pondered a few moments, and he thought he could see it. Urzen did not know the secret of his friend's strange relapse, for that had been kept private; so he had no clue to the priest's true character such as the count possessed.

"I believe the fellow is a villain," Urzen resumed. "He is surely a villainous looking man."

"So he is," responded the count.

"I never saw such a wicked look before in any human face."

"Ah," uttered a voice close by the door. "Who comes in for the flattering remark, my friend?"

Both the count and Stephen turned, and the humpbacked priest himself stood in their presence.

"Ha!" he uttered, as he noticed the position of the invalid. "Ah! By the Holy Virgin, you are recovering!"

"Ay," returned Conrad, "I am gaining fast now, as you may see."

The priest struggled hard with his feelings, and at length he managed to conceal the deep disappointment he felt. That is—he hid it from Stephen's eyes, but the count knew him too well.

"You have not been very punctual of late, father," the latter said, also trying to conceal his real feelings.

"No—no," returned Savotano in a perplexed manner; "I admit it; but the fact is, I have been called away. Let's see—I have not been here since the evening on which I found a stranger sitting by your side while you were asleep."

"Who was the stranger?"

"I don't know. I think I never saw him before. He was a good-looking young man. Perhaps he was some relative of yours."

This downright falsehood—so bold and flagrant—astonished even the count, for he knew the conversation which the priest had with Ruric on that occasion. And quick as lightning, too, went the thought to the sick man's mind that this was to hide the probability of his being suspected in connection with Ruric's disappearance.

"I thought you knew that man," the count said, looking the priest sharply in the face.

"No. I may have seen him before, but I did not surely recognize him then. I asked him why he was here, but he would not answer me save by urging me to silence. Who was he, my son?"

To be continued.

Another of Arthur Day's Matrimonial Exploits—The Prisoner in Welland Jail.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 12.—Arthur H. Day of Rochester, who was yesterday committed for trial on the charge of murdering his wife Deseriah by pushing her over the precipice, was to-day taken to Welland Jail. The detectives look with suspicion upon the story told by Mrs. Quigley and express their opinion that the whole truth has not yet been fully revealed.

It was learned this morning that Day had a third wife, having married a girl 19 years of age named Nina Woodams five years ago at the village of Pittsford, N.Y. On account of the man's habits she left him one year after they were married. Before this marriage he had been married to Deseriah. After Nina had left him she lived with her people for some time and afterwards at Suspension Bridge, and finally married again.

THE R. T. OF T.

Sixth Annual Session of the Council Begun at Montreal.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12.—The advance guard of the Royal Templars of Temperance has arrived and this morning the sixth annual session of the Dominion Council of Canada and Newfoundland was opened. The reports of the Dominion councillor, Dominion secretary and managing director to this session show good progress. The net gain of membership for the year reaches nearly 3000. The present membership in Canada is 20,900.

In the beneficiary department 577 certificates of insurance were added, bringing the total amount of insurance carried up to $5,272,400. The average age of the members of the insurance department is 30.92. During the year $240,000 was paid out to widows and orphans of deceased members, but the surplus in this department was increased from $19,500 last year to $28,130, of which $25,000 is bearing 5 per cent. interest. The cadet department has arranged for a training institute for cadet teachers and officers.

The Templars will go into camp Thursday and remain a week, and preparations are being made on a large scale.

WENT WITHOUT BREAKFAST.

Guests at a Hamilton Hotel Suffer From a Domestic Conspiracy.

HAMILTON, Aug. 12.—At the Police Court this morning two kitchen maids from the Arlington Hotel at the Beach charged Proprietor McNeal with non-payment of wages. It was shown that by pre-arrangement five girls and the cook left the hotel just before breakfast yesterday and the guests were unable to get anything to eat. The magistrate turned the tables on the damsels by dismissing the claims for wages and taxing them with the costs, which amounted to $4.60 in each case. He also expressed his regret that he could not order their arrest for conspiracy.

When the adjourned case of Mrs. Burrows was called at the Police Court this morning a surprise was in store for the Magistrate. Maude Burrows, the 16-year-old daughter who on Saturday had her mother arrested, because she feared it was her intention to skip out and leave her and several small children behind, appeared in the role of a blushing bride, Richard Roach, the young man referred to as having caused so much of the trouble, being the happy groom. The case was dismissed.

Terrified by Whitecaps.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The Secretary of the Interior to-day received a telegram from Governor Prince of New Mexico saying: Railroad officials ask protection for mail trains. Section men and others have been warned to quit work and some have done so. There are no acts of violence but the effect is to cripple the railroad service. The Governor suggests that all United States troops camp or march between Las Vegas and Lamy, as this would probably stop the whole white cap business. No action has yet been taken in the matter.

Charged With Forgery.

WINDSOR, Aug. 12.—John C. Mullins alias John C. Brosi was arrested in Windsor last evening on a charge of forgery, alleged to have been committed in Pittsburg. Mullins has been in Windsor over six months. He refuses to say anything except that he has retained a local legal firm as his attorneys and will fight against extradition.

Skin Diseases

Itching, Burning, Scaly, Crusted, Pimply and Blotchy Cured by the Cuticura Remedies.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONIAL.

About two years ago I was attacked with an inflammatory disease on my face (potyriasis), which was very troublesome, being extremely itchy and painful, giving rise to the production of small bran-like scales. My general health was affected by it. I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT, CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP according to directions, and experienced a change from the very first day; they worked wonderfully and by their continued used for about five months I was completely cured. I have unbounded faith in the CUTICURA REMEDIES. I regard the CUTICURA RESOLVENT as the very best blood purifier; a trial will convince anyone. The CUTICURA SOAP is the best in the market, and cheap at twice its present price. I shall use no other for the toilet and bath. With the prevalence of skin diseases among us as a people (and they are the most difficult to deal with), I regard the CUTICURA REMEDIES of more important and intrinsic value to the world than any other medicine now before the public. I am with deep gratitude,
(Rev.) WM. CREELMAN, York Corner, Me.

TORONTO TOPICS.

John Ormiston of Gananoque Chosen Grand Master I. O. O. F.

TORONTO, Aug. 15.—Grand Lodge, I.O.O.F., of Ontario, elected these officers yesterday morning: Grand Master, John Ormiston, Gananoque; deputy grand master, F. E. Fitzpatrick, Hamilton; grand secretary, J. B. King, Toronto; grand treasurer, William Badenach, Toronto; representative, H. Robertson, Collingwood; auditor, C. Packard, Stratford.

John Sinclair, aged 62, died suddenly of heart disease yesterday morning. He was a Scotchman, well known, and had lived in Toronto for 50 years and was formerly very active in politics. He was a Reformer.

The District Assembly of the K. of L. have endorsed the business tax.

Rev. John Leishman of Angus has accepted a call to Chester Presbyterian Church, in the suburbs of Toronto.

Miss Kerslake, music teacher of Bowmanville, who was visiting friends in West Toronto Junction, became suddenly ill while being driven from Toronto. She became unconscious before she could reach the house of her friend and never rallied. Death was caused by the bursting of a blood vessel.

Luther B. Willis, a printer by trade, who has been living at 147 Church-street, is a prisoner at Police Headquarters charged with bigamy. He was first married Oct. 5, 1885, by Rev. J. Howell of Owen Sound to Sarah Walker, and by her had two children. Growing tired of her he came down to Toronto about six months ago, and while attending Agnes-street Methodist Church made the acquaintance of a domestic employed at 297 Seaton-street and was married to her on Aug. 1 by Rev. J. P. Lewis of Grace Church. Wife No. 1, becoming tired of living alone, came to Toronto yesterday to find her wayward husband, and succeeded in locating his place of residence. He was taken into custody and acknowledged having married both women, but said he grew tired of the first.

John ("Jumbo") Campbell, the Queen's Park Sunday orator, has sent in a bill of $350 to the city for the destruction of his plate-glass windows by unknown miscreants.

THE OARSMEN.

Results of the Last Day at Lake Quinsigamond.

WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 14.—The second and last day of the National Amateur Regatta was the occasion of six magnificent races. Muller of the first New York Athletic Association pair-oar fainted when in the lead ½ mile from the finish, and the other clubs passed them.

Senior singles, final heat—1, William Caffrey of Lawrence, time 10.18¼; 2, E. J. Carney, Newark, N.J., time 10.34¼; 3, F. S. Hawkins, New York.

Junior singles, final heat—1, A. L. Bennett, Worcester, time 10.20¾; 2, P. Lehany, Albany, time 10.26¼; 3, A. C. Dowling, Boston; 4, J. Wright, Toronto.

Junior fours—1, Crescent B. C., Boston, time 9.30; 2, Narragansett B. C., Providence, time 9.39.

Pair oars—1, Detroit B. C., time 10.15¼; 2, New York A. C., time 10.31¾; 3, N.W.A.C.C.

Final heat, 8-oared shells—Atlantas, New York, won. Time 8.12¾. This time beats all previous records on still water. The record was 8.16. The result came somewhat as a surprise to the sports, as the crack Bradford crew started hot favorites. They were beaten 8 seconds.

THE FLOUR MARKET.

An Advance in Prices and Evidences of General Strength.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 14.—The Northwestern Miller says: Owing to low water the flour output showed a further decline last week. The aggregate production was 136,275 barrels. Quotations of flour are again 20 to 40 cents per barrel higher than a week ago to meet the advance in wheat. While at the top the business done has been light, there was quite free selling of patents for New England at $5.70 to $5.75, and even now those who do not hold quite as high as others report a fair demand. The sales of patent for the week probably equalled or exceeded the manufacture. The foreign trade is restricted by high prices. Bakers' are in moderate request at 24s 6d to 24s, but most of the mills are either sold ahead or are desirous of closing up their books for the year before accepting such business. Generally considered the market is very strong. The direct export shipments for the week were 30,800 bbls.

A BRAKEMAN KILLED.

John Lawrie of Toronto Terribly Mangled By a Freight Train.

GRAVENHURST, Aug. 14.—Brakeman John Lawrie, aged 24, fell off the ladder on the back of a box car in the railway yard here this morning. He fell outside the rails, but the oil-box caught him and twisted him round and round, breaking his back and neck and terribly mangling him. His body was taken to Toronto on the mail train to be buried there. He was a resident of Toronto, but has no relatives in this country.

Drowned While Bathing

ASBURY PARK, N.J., Aug. 14.—Fred L. Burthoof, aged 35, of Buffalo, and Miss Florence Sullivan of Brooklyn were drowned this afternoon while bathing in the sea.

THE LEPERS OF TRACADIE

HARROWING SIGHTS IN THE DOMINION LAZARETTO.

How the Government and Sisters of Charity Smooth the Doomed Patients Path—The Origin of the Scourge—The First Symptoms.

TRACADIE, N.B., Aug. 14.—One has not to go to far Molokai to witness that awful blight of the flesh, leprosy. Here in this out of the way spot of New Brunswick, on the shores of the great ocean, I saw yesterday sights that are calculated to make the soul sick indeed. Here are literally immured a score or more of wretches touched with a foulness which, for no fault of their own, excludes them forever from the world. It is true they are treated with more consideration than the lepers of scriptural times who dwelt in the open sepulchres about Jerusalem, subsisting on the fragments that accidental charity dropped on the ground in the wilderness. Nor is heard from them that terrible cry as of a lost soul in the Dantean hell, "Unclean! Unclean!" No, the lot of these unfortunates is made as endurable as the ghastly malady of which they are the victims will permit.

The Dominion Government has erected a commodious hospital on the banks of Tracadie River, overlooking the gulf into which the slender streamlet falls. It would be difficult to find anywhere a lovelier combination of "streamlet and hill" than this. Would that one could forget the hopeless fate of these fellows. But alas! they are "the world forgetting, by the world forgot." All that makes life worth enduring has been withdrawn from them.

The inmates and the house itself are kept scrupulously clean. Hired attendants do all the manual work. The inmates have no tasks imposed on them. Their path to death is smoothed and relieved of cares. They have a small farm with which they may do what they choose. They have boats in which they may fish and trawl or simply idle away the summer days.

As to the origin of the disease, some find it in the deterioration caused by generations of inter-marriage. The county of Gloucester, which is the seat of the disease, is settled by Acadian French and shut out to a large extent from the outside world by their different tongue. The little community married and intermarried until nearly everybody was related to everybody else. One story is that 140 years ago a bark from the coast of Syria was wrecked in the Gulf of St. Lawrence just off the shores of Gloucester county. The rescued sailors stayed for some considerable time with the Acadians, and from them the latter contracted the first cases of leprosy. Another version has it that a stranger hailing from Quebec was afflicted with the horror and left it as a legacy to his entertainers, while still another story is that the disease was contracted through some of the people eating putrid fish.

The disease is called leprosy, although it is probable that it is in many respects different from the leprosy which whitened the skin and rotted the bones of the Hebrews of old. But this is undoubtedly a malady of the same nature. It has been called by medical men Greek elephantiasis. A recent authority thus describes its symptoms:

"The first indication of the disease is the appearance of tiny tubercles on the skin, and especially on the face. These increase from the size of a pin head to that of a hazel nut. The nose and lips become thickened and swollen, so that the mouth is distorted and the features unrecognizable. The eyes droop, and eyelashes and eyebrows and sometimes the hair drop out. After a time the tubercles break, ulcerate and discharge, the disease even attacking the cartilage and bone, and piece by piece joints and flesh fall off until death gives the sufferer freedom from his terrible lot."

The average duration of the disease from the time the first symptoms are discovered until death ensues is about ten or twelve years.

The lazaretto was taken in charge by the Dominion Government in 1880, and Dr. Smith was placed in charge, who keeps a sharp lookout for infected persons.

In a conversation I had with the doctor he said:

"I am not yet satisfied that the disease is incurable. I discharged one man from the hospital some years ago and he has had no return of the symptoms. Last year I discharged a girl who had been admitted to the lazaretto just as soon as the first symptoms of infection developed themselves. Still, though these two are apparently free from the malady, I do not regard the cases as permanently cured, and I still hold them under close surveillance. Of late the disease has been dying out in Tracadie, its original seat; but out of the five new cases taken in last year one was from Cape Breton and four from the parishes which adjoin Tracadie—namely, Shippegan and Caraquet. I have traced a new focus to the disease, situated between Shippegan and Caraquet, and from this centre I have traced it to other settlements."

The act which gives the doctor authority to segregrate patients does not apply to the new hotbeds of the disease, but he feels that as soon as he possesses that power he will be able to stamp it out entirely.

Garutia Goes Home.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Manuel Garutia, the wealthy Mexican student who was found suffering from leprosy at the boarding house No. 105 East Twenty-eighth-street, on July 28, and was removed to North Brothers' Island by order of the Board of Health, has left with his family for his home in Yucatan. He was taken over the Pennsylvania Railroad. He was heavily clothed to prevent any one coming in contact with his diseased body.

SLEPT AT HIS POST.

Capt. Pourlot Dismissed from the Fishery Protection Service.

HALIFAX, Aug. 14.—Capt. Pourlot of the cruiser Connaught has been dismissed from the fishery protection service. A court of enquiry held aboard the flagship Acadia by Capt. Gordon revealed the fact that Capt. Pourlot had been deceiving his superiors as to the movements of his cruiser. The log sometimes showed that the vessel was at sea watching Yankee pirates while she was actually lying in Alberton harbor and the crew enjoying themselves at picnics and other frolics and Capt. Pourlot was a sentinel who slept at his post frequently.

A St. Lawrence Pilotess.

BROCKVILLE, Aug. 14.—It is not generally known that there is a lady on the river who is capable of piloting [illegible], but such is nevertheless the case. Mrs. George G. Lewis of New York City has received pilot papers from the United [illegible] Government, which a low her to pilot [illegible] in the waters of the [illegible] has been duly installed [illegible] 1890, of which [illegible]

Her 103d Descendant.

QUEBEC, Aug. 14.—The widow of Isaac Giguere of St. Roche, aged 79, was present yesterday at the christening of her 103d descendant. She counts 10 children, 86 grandchildren and 6 great grandchildren.

AN ANCASTER FARMER KILLED.

Fatal Accident in a Hay Field—A Hamilton Moulder Drowned.

HAMILTON, Aug. 14.—John Calder, jr., living in Ancaster Township, was haying yesterday afternoon. His team in some unexplained way became startled and Mr. Calder was run over and fatally injured. He died shortly afterward. The dead man was 35 years of age and unmarried.

William Bell, a moulder who lived at 26 Cannon-street west, was drowned at the Beach about 12 o'clock last night. Bell was heading probably for the Macassa, which had swung to at the piers to bring the last load home, when he fell off the piers and, before assistance could reach him, was drowned. The night was dark, and exactly how the accident occurred will probably never be known. What can be learned is that there was a splash in the water near the ferry slip, and a cry went up from many bystanders on the piers that some one had fallen overboard. Captain Campbell was soon on the spot and discerned three forms struggling in the water. Two of the men were got out, one of them, J. Wright, being rescued by his companion, W. Malvorey. The other man sank before assistance could reach him. Mr. Blackstock of the Toronto yacht Oriole dived and brought the body to the surface. Dr. Cuthbertson of Toronto worked hard to restore life, but the efforts were unavailing. Bell was dead.

The prize list of the big baby show last week in the Palace Rink amounts to something like $300. The prizes are as yet unpaid, and the mothers of the successful infants are kicking themselves for having entered the competition. When the show closed Manager Fulton said that he would pay the prize money some day this week. He left town last Sunday, saying he was going to London to get money to pay the prizes. Since then he has not been heard from.

At the meeting of the Presbytery to-day the resignation of Rev. Mr. Peatchall of Wellandport was considered. Rev. Mr. Peatchall used to be a Methodist minister, and it is said that he introduces Methodist ideas and methods too much to suit the Presbyterians to whom he ministers, the most heinous crime against him being that he has allowed a Methodist class-leader to preach for him in his absence.

LAKE AND RAIL RATES.

Meeting of the Joint Committee at Chicago—Questions Referred.

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The joint committee of the Central Traffic Association and the trunk lines, including the lake and rail lines, met this morning. The subject of rates was brought up first, but the attempt to raise the tariff on hogs, beef, provisions, grain, oil cake and wool from Chicago to the seaboard was unsuccessful, and the subject was laid on the table. The presence of representatives of the lake lines was a particular feature of the meeting, and to the lake committee several important matters were referred. They are to work on lake and rail differentials on all rail classified freight to the east, not including grain. They are to discuss the point at which rates take effect in Chicago and the proposition to exchange statements with the all-rail lines in order to secure the better maintenance of rates. They are also to consider the adoption of the uniform bill of lading on the lake lines. To the trunk line committee were referred the questions connected with the uniform bill of lading and local rates. It was voted to restore the tariff on iron on Sept. 1 to the figure in effect before the April reduction.

HIS ARM CUT OFF.

A St. Thomas Liquor Dealer Run Down by a Yard Engine.

ST. THOMAS, Aug. 14.—About 9 o'clock this evening John Doyle, wholesale liquor dealer and a prominent citizen for the past ten years, was run over by a yard engine at the Michigan Central depot and had his right arm cut nearly off at the shoulder, his left hand badly crushed and was cut about the head and legs. It was found necessary to amputate the arm at once. He now lies in a critical condition but hopes are entertained of his recovery.

The Fertilizers Act.

OTTAWA, Aug. 14.—Several important amendments to the Fertilizers Act were passed last session of Parliament, in consequence of which the Department of Inland Revenue has issued certain notices to those interested in the artificial manure trade, calling attention to the steps necessary for conforming to the law. It had been found that many parties were offering for sale fertilizers made by manufacturers who had neglected to send samples of them to the department, as required even by the old act. The sellers of these have been warned that in so doing they render themselves liable to prosecution, and no doubt proceedings will be taken in every such case hereafter, and it has also become necessary for all vendors of fertilizers to send in their names to the Department of Registration, annually paying a fee of $1. This is for the purpose of enabling the authorities to collect the samples at the proper time. Persons engaged in selling fertilizers should make certain that samples of the brand they offer have been sent to the department by the manufacturers and duly analyzed. A fee of $3 for the analysis of each sample is now exacted.

Nova Scotia Crops.

HALIFAX, Aug. 14.—According to the Government crop report just issued, the Nova Scotia hay crop, although scarcely reaching the average in most localities, is unsatisfactory. The weather for securing it has been all that could be desired, and this has lessened the labor and expense of haymaking and insured an unusual excellency in quality. The old hay in barns appears to be quite sufficient to make up any deficiency. Root crops are coming away well, but the potato fields require constant attention to rid them of the so-called Colorado beetle, which is more formidable now than in any former season in Nova Scotia.

He Will Fight Extradition.

WINDSOR, Aug. 14.—A detective arrived from Pittsburgh yesterday and spent the greater part of the day in trying to induce the attorneys of John C. Mullins, the alleged Pittsburg forger, to advise him to go back without a requisition. Mullins, however, states that he intends to fight the case. The amount of the alleged forgeries is nearly $6000, the German National Bank being interested the most.

Smallpox in the Guatemalan Army.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 14.—Smallpox is causing many deaths in the Guatemalan ranks on the Salvadorian frontier.

It appears difficult to arrange peace, as United States Minister Mizener will not act in accord with the rest of the diplomatic corps.

Held on a Serious Charge.

BELLEVILLE, Aug. 14.—George Lewis, aged 15, was committed for trial yesterday by A. F. Wood, M.L.A., for a criminal assault on the 5-year-old step-daughter of Edward McQuillan, a resident of Bannockburn.

THE BLOCKADE LIFTED.

TRAINS RUNNING REGULARLY ON THE CENTRAL.

The Passenger Service Said To Be as Good as Before the Strike—The Delaware & Hudson Men Return to Work Fully Satisfied.

ALBANY, Aug. 14.—The hundred yard men who were out on strike on the Delaware & Hudson Road at this point have agreed to return to work. The night force went on at 6 o'clock to-night and the day force will go on at 6 o'clock to-morrow morning. The men have become satisfied that their suspicions of the D. & H. knowingly handling Central freight were unjustified.

The strikers continue to speak with confidence of the final results of the strike. The passenger service on the Central Road was to-day beyond criticism. Six freights were sent west and seven south from the West Albany yards this afternoon. There was no freight moved there to-night. The yardmaster at West Albany said he had cleared two tracks through the blockade of cars and that through freights to-day came over those tracks where formerly passenger tracks were used. The usual daily number of east and west freight trains in and out of the West Albany yards reached 70, while 25 north and south trains represent the freight traffic on the Hudson River division.

The Welsh Strike Settled.

CARDIFF, Aug. 14.—Representatives of the railway authorities and the striking employes met to-day and arrived at a settlement. The strike is ended.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

A Chemical Combine—The Panic Spreading in Armenia.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—A chemical union, the aim of which is to monopolize the trade in chemicals, has been formed. The union has a capital of $40,000,000.

Terrified Armenians.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The panic among the Christian inhabitants of Armenia is spreading. Hundreds are fleeing to Persia.

Cholera on the Euxine.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 14.—Five persons have died at Nicolaieff from a disease supposed to be Asiatic cholera. Eleven cases of the disease have been reported there so far. The Porte has decided to quarantine all arrivals from places on the Black Sea.

SWEPT OVER THE FALLS.

Two Foolhardy Oarsmen Lose Their Lives in the Niagara Flood.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 14.—Two unknown men were swept over the Horseshoe Falls to-day. They had been out in a rowboat above the rapids, and the current proved too much for them. One leaped out of the boat and attempted to swim ashore but was carried down by the current, and the other made the fatal plunge clinging to the capsized boat.

Losses Caused by Flames.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 14.—The Kentucky Distillery Company's plant was entirely destroyed by fire. Loss $800,000, fully insured.

The Bishop of Alexandria.

KINGSTON, Aug. 14.—Rev. Alexander Macdonell, whose appointment as Roman Catholic Bishop of Alexandria has just been announced, is about 50 years of age. He was ordained a priest 27 years ago. He was born in Lochiel, a few miles distant from the see of Alexandria. Shortly after his ordination he was appointed pastor of Lochiel, and in 1879 was transferred by Bishop O'Brien to Alexandria. He labored there until 1885, when he was appointed vicar-general of the diocese of Kingston by Archbishop Cleary. During his appointment at Alexandria he built a most beautiful church, known as St. Finnal. He is well fitted for the position, especially as he speaks with fluency English, French and Gaelic. His diocese is composed of Highland Scotch. His see is only seven miles from the first Catholic see in Ontario, for which Bishop Alexander Macdonell was consecrated in 1821. In 1826 the see was transferred from St. Raphael's to Kingston.

Jamaica's Trade.

OTTAWA, Aug. 14.—A pamphlet of 71 pages, prepared under the direction of George Johnson, Dominion statistician, was received yesterday at the statistical department from the printers. This book is compiled for distribution by Adam Brown, honorary commissioner from Canada to the Jamaica exhibition. It contains information in detail respecting the imports and exports of the West Indies to and from the United States in order to show to Canadian merchants the character of the exports of our neighbors, so that an effort may be made to obtain a still larger share of this trade for the Dominion. The pamphlet contains the quantities of different articles imported by Canada from the West Indies, Brazil and Mexico for the past 16 years and the exports to these countries for the same period. There are also tables of the exports and imports for 14 years with South America, the object being to give such information to the merchants and manufacturers of Canada as will enable them to judge of the extent which the proposed Jamaica exhibition is offering to them new avenues of trade.

Trash But Not Indecent.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—The grand jury yesterday refused to indict Manager Patrick Farrell of the American News Company and his two assistants, who were arrested for selling obscene literature by Agent Britton of the Society for the Enforcement of Criminal Laws. The books on which the arrests were based were "Thou Shalt Not" and "Speaking of Ellen," by Ross; "The Devil's Daughter," by Balzac; "An Actor's Wife," by George Moore, and the "Clemenceau Case," by the younger Dumas. Assistant District Attorney Lindsay and Judge Bedford were before the jury, and Mr. Bedford told them that in his opinion the books were merely "trash." On his recommendation the cases were dismissed.
